The modern economy would collapse without the internet and American life would be extraordinarily disrupted. It's a simple fact that the internet is a public utility, not a private service. It's time we regulated it as such.

An open internet is important for competition. How can a small company with less money hope to compete when big dollars can buy him out? Studies show innovation comes from young CEO's more than older ones, and the internet is a place - more so than the regular marketplace - where innovation moves at the fastest speeds.

I urge you to let competition work, and not to allow big money to stifle innovation.

It's what's made independent media outlets like Democracy Now! reach a massive audience that would otherwise be relegated to choosing from corporate media channels. It's the lifeline that allows small innovators to create a service that reaches almost everyone on the globe. But the FCC's proposal could kill this Internet democracy. Mark the internet providers as Utility under Title II. Verizon is playing both sides. They take tax breaks for fiber installation and then they bailed. Essentially earning free money from the tax-payers.

They also installed a lot of infrastructure under Title II.

I fully support Net Neutrality for the masses. Private take over is a violation and takes even more away from the public to give more to greedy enterprises who already benefit from the price gouging they currently practice. This is hardly neutral, but it shouldn't be allowed to be taken over and given to giant corporations.

To the members of the FCC

The internet needs to stay free and open. Companies like Comcast and AT&T already make insane profits so the cry that they need more money to invest is another lie that corporations like that are so fond of using. They do not understand they are the snake that is eating its own tail. It is a mental illness to keep seeking to make the most insane profits as possible for a greed that will never be filled. Other countries are proving to be far more progressive, but if this proposal goes through than it is another nail in the demise of the U.S. Which seems perfectly ok with these corporations as long as they can line their pockets. So the question is, are you going to support these mentally ill greedy entities that do not care for the whole and what is best for the United States? Because that is what we are looking at. What side will you be on?

The FCC is supposed to represent the interests of the public, not appease the cable industry (and even if Chairman Wheeler insists he's not doing that, he effectively is).

NO CONSUMER in the US and beyond wants anything less than total neutrality when it comes to the Internet: we don't want the beginning of negotiated 'fast lanes' for service with content providers.

All that will do is pass extra expense to us (see Netflix raising it's fees for new members after negotiating with Verizon for a real example of this) and flood the pockets of ISPs.

Please, please do your job - and say no - for us, the public. We're trying to make it clear that we need this proposal to be refused.

It is crazy to think that the FCC would make this move. This will hurt consumers if you move forward and allow companies to attach fees to access services that the consumer is already otherwise paying for. While "free market" internet may look good on paper to some, with the fact that many people have only two options for broadband internet in their area (not to mention the fact that there are still many places in our nation that don't even have one option), these companies are only going to increase their profit margins without increasing services. Please do not move forward with this terrible substitute for Net Neutrality.

Please preserve equal access to the Internet. An open internet is essential to a democratic society, promoting the free flow of information. An open internet allows all voices to be heard, supporting all businesses and the economy overall. A tiered Internet would only serve to enrich a few already wealthy people, shore up oligarchic tendencies, and defy American principles of a fair playing field.

The FCC is intended to serve the common good, not kowtow to special business interests. Please do your jobs to preserve an open Internet.

Thank you!

This could damage and severely impede the ability for folks to get information from the internet, in an age where libraries are closing down. Please rethink these kinds of policies, it may be fine for mega-business, but bad for the community who uses it.

Subject: Save Net Neutrality!

If we can't keep net neutrality - if folks with deep pockets can buy even more of the internet than they already can - then it's all up with us in the U.S. Thanks to Citizens United, they can already buy elections even more decisively than they could before.

I strongly urge the retention of net neutrality, and vigorously oppose any efforts to allow money to throttle the internet in their favor.

The giving over of complete control of the internet to mega corporations, which is what you are proposing, is unconscionable! It will put what could very well be the final nail in the coffin of our already moribund democracy! The control of these mega corporations and "the 1%" of individuals who control the largest part of the nation's wealth have already, many argue, (thanks to the benighted majority of the Supreme Court) turned the United States into an oligarchy!
Please, if you have even a modicum of patriotism, stop this greater than any terrorist threat to our country!
Sincerely,

Telecom companies already charge us way more than the services we get. When we moved, we chose to NOT buy TV services; we went with an antenna. Why should we continue to line their pockets? Why should we contribute to the billions the CEOs of these company already make? They're being greedy, acting like spoiled children. And I assume, since you're pushing for this, you're getting kickbacks. And people all over this country are struggling. Please give us a consumers a break and leave the Internet the way it is.

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

To the FCC——

Please build any net neutrality argument upon solid legal standing. Specifically, this means reclassifying broadband under Title II of the Telecommunications Act of 1934.

706 authority from the Telecommunications Act has been repeatedly struck down in court after legal challenges by telecom companies. Take the appropriate steps to prevent this from happening again.

— The internet is an important place of socialization, education, activism, as well as keeping an eye on finances, check on our kids, even entertainment. Taking that away would put a gargantuan dent in creating future technologies. Research be it for high school, personal occupations or scientific discovery would most certainly grind to a halt at the detriment our entire online social system. Protect internet neutrality to ensure that our children will continue to benefit from its valuable resources.

Please do not vote for this pay-to-play scheme of Internet "regulation" -- such interference is but the naked hand of oligarchy tightening vise-like around our country.

For too long, the devolution of power here has been framed as to benefit an overbearing federal government at the expense of localities. The harsher reality of it, and especially as seen in this absurd proposal, is that the devolution of power is really from civic institutions to rapacious companies. This measure is a sad example of a civic institution fashioning the knife which the tyrant will use in the commission of his crimes.

Kill this proposal with utmost haste. The nation demands it.

Please ensure that the internet neutrality is maintained. The internet should open, a level playing field and competitive - not dominated by a few big companies. That is what has made the internet such a powerful tool for innovation in our modern era. Letting big companies dominate would destroy all that. Protecting competition is the key. Protect us from internet takeover by a few big companies who are essentially monopolies. That is your job. You already enable big internet and communications companies to "skim" the profits by serving only regions which allow big profits, leaving rural areas like mine (only 60 miles from Washington DC) poorly served with cell phones and internet, if at all. This is unlike the policies for landline phone service, electricity, etc. followed since the 1930s, which have helped make this country great and powerful - and which have bound it together in many ways and promoted innovation and competition. Do not make the same mistake with net neutrality, allowing a few companies to skim profits with internet speed. eliminate their competitors and become monopolies in fact and practice.

I graduated from college two years ago and it took me a year to find gainful employment. Now I have a full time job, but with my student loans and rent and car payments and insurance, I have to cut back everywhere I can. I don't have cable, I don't have a smart phone, and I do most of my shopping at dollar and thrift stores. My one "big splurge" is the smallest internet package available - I use the internet to stay in touch with family and friends, to watch movies, to learn new skills, to do research for my writing projects. Keep the internet fair and open to EVERYONE - not just those who can afford it.

The internet needs to stay neutral. Making some websites slower than others hinders innovation and makes it harder for new tech companies to compete if their site is inherently slower. There are many other issues with I am certain others have brought up, which is why the web must stay neutral.

Don't give control to big corporations that just wanna make a bigger profit margin. You wouldn't give control of our national forest to logging companies to do whatever they want with. There isn't much difference between the two both the Internet and national forest are for everyone to enjoy but corporations will turn it into a profit machine. Stop this proposal now and instead propose to protect the Internet as it is. Thank you for your time.

The telecom companies have No right to slow down the internet. These companies are utility providers, like an electric company for instance.
These telecom companies must be treated like any other utility provider, that is allowed to do business in the service of the public.
This tenant includes providing equal access, in interrupted service and equal distribution.
A water utility: delivers water to a customer and the water flows out at a certain pressure and is not interrupted.
An electric utility provides electrical service uninterrupted as well.
The same treatment of consumers must also extend to the internet, where telecom internet service providers provide internet service at an affordable rate, and uninterrupted service.

The FCC; Again has its ultimate responsibility to the Consumers first and to the Corporations second.

Dear FCC Commissioners,

You have a major decision in your hands today, not just for American citizens, but the world over. The Internet has become the modern day crossroads, as millions of people use it to obtain news & information about their world, communicate with loved ones & new acquaintances, find work, manage their personal & professional lives.

If you set up a pay for play based on system speed & who has the resources to participate, you will be undermining democracies, human rights & will accelerate poverty, misinformation, & the growing income inequalities throughout the world.

Please save this precious resource for humankind.

Sincerely,

I am a public school 5th grade teacher, and my students and I use the internet on a regular basis to learn and research and collaborate. It scares me to think that the internet could be controlled by corporate interests here in America, one of the worlds great experiments in democracy. I have told my students how the internet is a level playing field for people around the world, and it would be a sad day if I had to tell them another story, about an internet manipulated and controlled by corporate interests and profit motives. This would have many negative impacts for the education sector for sure.

I hope you can support net neutrality, for now and for the future, and protect and safeguard this powerful expression of democracy, with open and equal access for all.

Thank you!

Dear FCC,

The internet has replaced the telephone as the MOST used form of communication between individuals and businesses. This needs to be recognized, and the internet should be available to all equally as telephone service is.

Thanks,

Subject: The internet is central to American life and the economy

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

Allowing internet service providers to create internet “fast lanes” and “slow lanes” would do nothing more than allow them to extort payments from companies like Netflix. It’s time to admit that the internet is a public utility, not a private “service.”

I urge the FCC to treat the internet as what it is, a key element of daily life and communication, as or more important than telephone service. Please treat the internet as a utility for all.

Thank you.

Don't do the undemocratic thing. Leave the internet open and free to all, not just to the handful of elite that wants to stifle free expression. Too much of media information is filtered through layers of corporate interests, while congress accepts donations to campaign funds. Democracy is dying a slow death in this country. Do the right thing for a change.

Big corporations like Fox, MSNBC, et al, should have to compete with small ones and even individual pages. Let the market decide what content they want without the money of big telecom companies being allowed to shut out smaller companies.

Thanks!

The Internet is one of the few remaining bastions of the free exchange of information. Allowing corporations to essentially put speed traps on some services will end this. It will also tilt the playing field on the internet as a marketplace, stifling innovation and making it yet less attractive to work for a project that you have developed. In short, it is a continuation of this country's backslide into fascism.

If ATT had had its way in the 90's we wouldn't have the internet as we know it now - there wouldn't be any DSL, we'd be paying for T2 lines if we wanted the speeds we now consider normal, or still compromising with ISDN. Net neutrality has allowed the massive innovation that has occurred despite the efforts of ATT et al. Keep that innovation coming by denying the ATT/Comcast proposals.

As a registered Democrat, I am appalled by the FCC's (under a Democratic administration!) consideration of new rules that would in effect destroy internet neutrality and open, free access to the internet for the majority of US citizens. As the economy remains difficult for all but the richest, the proposals being discussed today lead us farther down the path toward "Two Americas". As President Obama reflects upon the great American divide based upon privilege and social class, how does the FCC justify adding one more nail to the coffin we've constructed for social equality? Allowing internet service providers to create internet “fast lanes” and “slow lanes” would do nothing more than allow them to extort payments from companies like Netflix. It’s time to admit that the internet is a public utility, not a private “service.”

In our modern age of information, the net has become the lifeline of communication, finance, cooperation, and education. Please don't take it out of the hands of the many to please a privileged few. The repercussions will be negative and far-reachingly disruptive. Net neutrality, which has become the norm for most of our allies, should be the path for us to follow as well - to stay competitive, to stay innovative, to stay fair, to stay relevant.

decisions. Millions of people are requesting for an open internet, where no one decides for you. Stop letting big companies tell you what to do. You are working for the people, not for the companies. Please, stop and think, 'are you doing what's right for our people and their future children?'. If you don't listen to the people, then what good are you doing as a person of your position to represent the people.

The whole world is watching and will know how you responded to Corporations wanting to control the internet and the free flow of information. Will your actions be in alignment with the intentions of those brave and insightful individuals like Thomas Jefferson, and others, who set the course for this country to be a nation of free people. Your actions will not go unnoticed, and Americans are ready to make a great noise about this infringement on the freedoms of the open-sharing of information to all.

I support your decision to reject this proposal put forth by these large corporations that want to interfere with the rights of American citizens to freely express and share information.

The internet should remain the semblance of free speech and access without allowing corporations to dictate speed and availability.

Net neutrality is rarely publicized as a threat to public rights. Yet blocking sites and manipulating search results clandestinely removes one of the last vestiges of personal and professional opportunity.

Do not allow corporations to mock the basic rights of internet users. Allow a modicum of respect and protect against corporate internet monopolies. The consequences will be egregious.

The Internet is this Century's equivalent of the creation of free libraries, with equal access to all in the 19th century. With Citizen's United, Super Pacs, Monopoly control of major media outlets, lobbyists replacing the will of the majority on Capitol Hill, the continuation of an open Internet has never been more important. Either we're a government by and for the People, or we are for sale to the highest bidder. And selling the communication of ideas and news on the Internet to the highest bidder seems like another step away from any commitment to democratic ideals. The economic gap between rich and poor has never been greater, and our society is impoverished as a result. That will never change if the Internet becomes another tool of manipulation and profit for the super-wealthy. Please keep an open Internet.

I am elderly on a very small fixed income and entirely dependent on the Internet for contact with the outside world. Creation of premium "fast lane" service would be devastating for me, as I am barely able to make ends meet, what with drastically rising rents and food costs; I am unable to pay for adequate internet speed. ISP access costs in the U.S. are already the highest in the Western world, and the Internet is a public utility, that is the basis of most of the communication in this country. Thus, an increase in rates for the current internet speed would not only bring a worsening of my own quality of life, but, more importantly, would increase cost for bujsinesses, charitable organizations, and government, adding considerably to the rate of inflation.

It is wrong to give these giant and often global corporations control of every aspect of American lives and yet our Congress and Supreme Court seem intent on doing that. If you can't think about our future children, please think about your own. Do you want your children and their children to live in a world controlled by the 1%. Net neutrality MUST continue. As an educator, I hear "We support ALL students": "We must close the achievement gap"; "We want every child to reach his/her highest potential".

Then, what I see is, big business writing tests and bad mouthing educators and doing what is possible to destroy schools that serve our children.

Our children are our future. Our children will grow up to be your neighbors and my neighbors.

WHAT kind of neighbors do YOU want? Educated neighbors who love to learn? Educated neighbors who want to do their part to make the world a better place? Educated citizens who will preserve democracy?

Net neutrality will continue to provide us all, rich and poor alike, the resources to educate ourselves and build an even stronger democracy than we have ever seen in the years before us.

Please support our collective future by continuing net neutrality.

Net neutrality means we all win. When one of us wins, we all win.

When big business controls us, we all lose.

Please support the success of all and make net neutrality a given that moves us all forward together.

Thanks for your time and thought as you use your power to mold our collective futures.

Sincerely,
Diane Monsen

I, being a college student, am constantly looking up information on my laptop or phone for the most part of my week. I get emails from professors every day about homework assignments, slides to study for exams, and what my grades are. And on my breaks I enjoy watching YouTube videos with friends or see what my family in Massachusetts are doing through Facebook and other social media. If I am working hard for my education, I feel that I as well as many others like myself deserve to have speedy internet to either work and/or play freely together.

The internet is humanity and it should be fully formed and free to each individual. We can make our own decisions and we need absolute freedom to access the records of humanity and to build the history of mankind so it can be shared and it may expand the consciousness of each individual. If you impede on this nature it is sinful and you will pay with your soul. Who do you stand with; The illusion or the Truth

Please do NOT interfere with or impede a completely free and open internet. The internet was created with PUBLIC funds and it should simple be used as a PUBLIC service for free and open trade and communication.
Please do NOT Corporatize the internet and allow it to become a tool of business interests that will impair its function as a PUBLIC market place for the free and open exchange of ideas and thought... for this is a vital life-line for American democracy. Do NOT make it another tool for business oligarchy.

Please build any net neutrality argument upon solid legal standing. Specifically, this means reclassifying broadband under Title II of the Telecommunications Act of 1934.

706 authority from the Telecommunications Act has been repeatedly struck down in court after legal challenges by telecom companies. Take the appropriate steps to prevent this from happening again.

Recent Supreme Court decisions have given the rich and corporations more power over who gets elected by opening the flood gates of campaign financing. By ending net neutrality the free and open nature of the internet will end; large amounts of money will control the voices heard over the information highway. This will drive one more nail into the coffin of Lincoln's vision of America as a "Government of the people, by the people, for the people, [that] shall not perish from the Earth." Hyperbole? I think not. It should be noted that a Princeton University study found that the U.S. is NOT a democracy or a republic any more; it is an oligarchy. The very wealthy are running the country and they want control over the last bastion of effective free speech.

Net neutrality is the ONLY way that the internet can operate in a fair manner. It will be an obvious monopolization of the Internet for profit and that will not be tolerated by the people of this world. I ask that you please reconsider what the right thing is to do here, because the people know what is the right thing to do and the people also know that the FCC knows what the right thing is to do so if net neutrality is diminished it will only be another battle of corporations who care only about profit vs the people of the nations who only want justice. What a beautiful world we could ALL live in together if greed was put aside and power/money was used for the good of our world and the people who live in it. Thank you.

Do what's right! If a particular company wants to make rules about monitoring what "is transferred through their cables" I don't think it's right or constitutional but consumers have the right AND the option to do business elsewhere. Don't take that option away from the consumers that are educated and understand what is going to happen if this goes into action and net neutrality is killed.

This hasn't been on the news and it's been monitored closely online. Nothing important is ever portrayed to the public correctly and this is the 1 way that we can still research and decide the TRUTH vs being force fed a bunch of bias or deluted information.

Save the open internet. The good news is there's a major backlash -- working with advocates, we pressured the FCC with a million strong campaign, and now major tech companies, investors and members of Congress are slamming this dangerous proposal! Let's urgently flood FCC members with messages demanding our Internet stay free and open ahead of today's key meeting:

Please, no internet fast lanes! Much of our economy, freedom, and our social livelihood in this age is based on a free and open internet that does not discriminate based on the type of traffic that passes through it. Imagine if your garbage service decided to take your neighbor's garbage but not yours each week, unless you paid additional fees (maybe even three times as much as you used to). Would you want to live in a neighborhood where your garbage was picked up monthly just because your disposal company realized it had a monopoly and wanted more money? Our internet traffic could meet a similar fate unless the FCC reclassifies the internet as a regulated common carrier. This decision affects all of us as well as the future of the internet.

This is an outrage! Obama promised net neutrality. What is his (or any other political promise) worth?
Zip. I reckon 90% of people in office are guilty of bait and switch...this is another classic.
The corporate "fix" is in, again.
And with the Courts (stacked with pro-corporate appeasers and fund-raisers) we've just about put "America on eBay" – available for the taking by the shock troops of K-street.
Government has become a big pop machine: Put money in, and out pops corporate policy.
Is that what the Founders envisioned? Is that what our Service members fought and died for?
Or are ya'll getting a few sips of the pop?

So let me get this straight. This country is already dealing with a problem in our education system in poverty stricken areas and now there is going to be a limit on what people can access on-line? Something that they do in communist countries is limit what information the people have access to. They only allow people to see what the government wants them to see. Is this really the direction we are going in? By restricting our rights to have access to world wide information you are limiting our rights as human beings.

The free flow of internet resources is essential in the struggle to access information for poor and minority communities that already have minor access to information via the internet. "Classing" the speed and access to the internet by limiting who can afford to pay for faster service will further disenfranchise minority and poor communities. This will have detrimental impacts on various fronts including access to resources related to education such as grants, scholarships, college information, college applications, and other programs. Please don't add another barrier to educational achievement and access to higher education. This would be another way in which America's claim to equality would again come with a ticket price divided by "first class" seating, followed by "more leg room," "coach," "stand by," and sold out!

Do the right and moral thing!

To whom it may concern,
It would entirely unfair to take internet from people while speeding up someone else's. Think of how absurd that sounds, you take some people's internet away/slow down while speeding up other people's and we both know who those last people would be.

It doesn't make any sense, there are businesses using internet connection everyday, some solely rely on the internet. Imagine how many businesses would go out of business just so you guys can do something pointless. Adding to the unemployment rate. So then the middle class can continue paying extremely high taxes helping those people, it's not fair. As well as the wealthy. Everyone has all kinds of worries everyday, they don't need to worry about whether or not they're going to have internet connection which many people use so much though out the day.

I do not want to insult anyone here but this idea makes absolutely no sense.

Subject: FCC has an obligation to regulate the internet as a utility

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

FCC——

The 21st century internet is an integral part of our economy, democracy, and communication systems. America is absolutely dependent on an open internet operating on net neutrality principles.

As such, you have an obligation to regulate it as a utility. Please assert your Title II authority, and stop trying to appease the telecom giants at the expense of everyone else.

Already the USA is behind almost ALL other countries in Quality of internet service. While citizens and business in other countries are excelling with internet speed, service, coverage and very LOW price if any, here we are in the USA having to waste our time fighting with the FCC and Fascist corporations over Greed and desire to NOT deliver.

FCC, you should be pounding in a positive manner to get the US side of the internet super highway Up to Speed, Coverage and Service equivalent to the rest of the world. Each day we step deeper into a third world country status while Fascist Greedy Corporations continue to steal from and dismantle us in the USA.

I don't understand why this should even be an issue. It seems every day we have to fight to protect our Constitutional rights from our own government. Corporations shouldn't be allowed to control the internet. The public should know which corporations are sponsoring things like this so we can voice our opinion and block these (hostile) takeovers. What they are attempting is evil, plain and simple. If you need us to tell you that, we need someone with a moral compass to

The FCC broke the monopoly that the RBOCs had before. This changed the landscape dramatically. But slowly and surely consolidation is creating the same monster companies whose interest at heart MUST follow investor sentiment and put growth over anything else as thus is how they can fulfill their mandate to return the most for the investment if its shareholders.

This conflicts with net neutralization in which content is delivered without any algorithms that allow the carriers to add premium tariffs. Small companies and startups are put at a disadvantage and subscribers are funneled into services that pay the most to the carriers. bundling no longer represents a best in class but for sale for those with the deepest pockets.

The FCC MANDATE is to ensure consumer choice and to eliminate efforts at using regulation as a mean to obtain control over consumer choices. CARRIERS HAVE NO BUSINESS IN THE DATA BEING DELIVERED FROM ONE END TO ANOTHER AS IT HAS NO BUSINESS IN LISTENING TO VOICE COMMUNICATIONS TO DECIDE THAT A BUSINESS MEETING HAS HIGHER PRIORITY THEN A DISTRESSED WIFE CALLING HER HUSBAND AT WORK TO ASK FOR HELP.

This is not just a good analogy of how bandwidth preferences can cause harm to individuals being ranked low, but on how the carrier would need to monitor subscriber traffic and violate their right to privacy just so they know the priority they must assign to the subscribers connection.

Anonymous tokens mean nothing at thud point as the carrier itself already applied a traffic preference to their OWN SUBSCRIBER in order to assign traffic preference.

Subject: Save Net Neutrality!
Greetings,

I strongly urge that the FCC act to prohibit any ISP from being able to institute discriminatory or preference fees in order to accept or prioritize data for internet transport. ISPs charge their end users robust fees. In the U.S., internet access fee are already among the world's highest, while the quality of the service is a disgrace when compared to such nations as Singapore, South Korea, Finland, and others. These fees entitle their end users to receive as much traffic from any internet source as they may choose to receive. Why should I have to pay Comcast twice for access to internet content that I am already paying the content provider for? If Comcast or Verizon are allowed to charge content providers for access to their networks, those charges will be passed to end users who want that content--in effect, allowing ISPs to charge for data both entering and existing their networks, which is ridiculous. Instead of facilitating existing monopoly practices for data transport in the U.S., the FCC should be doing everything in its power to break the cable and phone company monopolies that exist and protecting rigorous competition in every market, at every level, and ensuring continuing service improvement and fair pricing.

No one has the right to a larger, faster share of the internet at the expense of others simply to make a profit. The internet free and open and should remain that way.

Congress should soundly support net neutrality legislation. Network operators should not be allowed to block, impede or interfere with any legal internet traffic. They especially should not be allowed to prioritize content or services.

Neutrality means neutral not some are better than others and deserve a better speed.

Dear FCC,

I am writing to oppose rules that will allow for discrimination on the Internet - where the wealthy can purchase faster Internet service and everyone else continues to have slower service.

I do not want telecom giants and wealthy Internet companies to determine the future of the Internet. I want new ideas to flourish on the Internet and not be blocked because they do not have sufficient funds to purchase fast service and compete.

I do not want the Internet to be turned into another vehicle that allows money to flow from working Americans to the wealthiest -- where web-based services like Netflix purchase faster service and pass the costs on to consumers.

The proposal being considered would kill rather than protect Net Neutrality and allow rampant discrimination online. The Internet should be viewed as a public good and should be operated consistent with our rights to Freedom of Speech and Freedom of the Press. Turning the Internet into a pay to play scheme is unacceptable.

Subject: Net Neutrality

Hello FCC Person! I am contacting you about the net neutrality issue that is currently being reviewed by the FCC. I'm sure you've heard plenty of arguments both for and against it, but I just wanted to give you my reasons.

First, I am for net neutrality. The idea of calling the current proposal "internet fast lanes" is an insult to people who actually understand technology (while at the same time placating the uneducated). Internet speeds will NOT get faster for specific websites/services, they will be granted full bandwidth for the customer's data plan. They will just throttle the rest of the internet who can't afford to pay extra. It's similar to being in traffic. People in the carpool lane aren't going faster than the speed limit. Sure they're going faster than the rest, but its not faster than times when there isn't any traffic. But this analogy falls short in comparison to the way the internet works.

The internet speeds currently achieved even during high traffic times is more than sufficient to handle the load. Not only that, but given all the tax breaks the gov't has given the ISP industry to increase internet coverage to rural areas on top of their record profits, they can afford to add more infrastructure. Weren't we supposed to have fiber installed to every house? Didn't we give them billions to install the infrastructure? Why aren't they common carriers if we gave them so much money to install the infrastructure in the first place?

Anyways, I'll get to my point. I currently operate a small web hosting service in my house. On a daily basis I test the internet speeds to my service, and throughout the day my transfer speed stays constant (even during "high traffic" times when the "tubes" are supposedly clogged). If the FCC gives the ISPs the ability to charge people extra for "Fast Lanes" (i.e. getting the bandwidth/speed they are already paying for in the first place) the cost of my service will out way its benefits. This will make it so only companies who can afford to pay the extra surcharge will still serve content on the internet. Small businesses (or hobbies like mine) will shut down. What if facebook had to deal with this during its infancy, would it be here today if users had to wait for their content to load due to being throttled (not in a "fast lane")? I doubt it. Given the amount of tax revenue small internet start ups have the potential to generate (like facebook), not making ISPs Common Carriers seems like the gov't is shooting itself while upsetting the general public.

Like my fellow internet-magicians (as the elder generations seem to consider us), I feel that the internet has become as important in my daily life as electricity. Could I live without the internet? Sure. Would I want to? No.

Sorry for the long rant, I just wanted to voice my opinion. I hope you understand the future implications of stifling the internet would have on free speech, and small aspiring businesses. Thank you for your time.

~Joe

Subject: Real Net Neutrality
Good morning,

My name is Emmanuelle Leal and I am contacting you from Albuquerque, NM. I am contacting you to express my opposition to the proposed rules on the Internet and to urge you to start working on reclassifying the Internet as a common carrier. That is the only way we will have true net neutrality.

Roughly half of our people in New Mexico don't have access to the Internet, please don't break it before we get it!

Thank you for your time.

Dear Ones!

The proposal to effectively restrict and lessen the availability of universal access to the Internet, is something that is not a good idea. This proposal has the real potential to severely limit the access we enjoy now. It will sell the Internet to the highest bidder and create an Internet that is too restricted by money... instead of maintaining a free flow of information for all citizens.

Please do not vote this proposal into being and carefully consider the consequences of any action that may be taken in the future.

Subject: Regarding Net Neutrality
Dear FCC, please reconsider the proposed changes regarding net neutrality.
Allowing major cable companies to regulate the amount of traffic from different sources will have widespread negative effects, not only within the US, but also globally. Websites and services which rely on US traffic may eventually need to shut down because of increased costs, and this will affect every user.
I understand your need for new rules, and in other countries these may seem more reasonable, but with such a large monopoly in place as in the US it may lead to direct extortion as a large majority of consumers have no real choice when it comes to their provider.
Again, please reconsider and keep the internet open for everyone until a superior solution has been found.

Subject: LEGAL NOTE REGARDING THE INTERNET AND RULING

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

The internet was developed with public tax dollars as defense research projects, giving backbone and origination to the current maintenance and assurance of a telecommunications system that can survive many types of wars.

Just because it has gone beyond what was thought of in its incarnation does not change that NO CORPORATE OR PRIVATE GROUP, INDIVIDUAL, NOR COMPANY has any kind of legal standing to throttle, exploit, or censor the Internet, nor should it be even legal to profit from "beyond common carrier" provisions, that is, once a user is accessing the web, there is no legal or ethical standing to allow profit or control of speeds or transmission based on usage.

This same corruption destroyed even-handedness of cable television with nothing except under-serving, over-promising, outright exploitation, and reduction in quality based on an ever-narrowing ability to compete with a corporate cancer that devours any possibility of competition.

The essential difference is that the Internet was funded with tax dollars in every level of its development. No company can claim any right to control transmission for profit or market exploitation.

Do the right thing now, or be seen as a corporate lackey who caved and temporarily or permanently destroys common carrier, neutral access to the one remaining, taxpayer-owned, public right of Internet communication. Don't give away net neutrality in the name of a corporate job promised once you're no longer FCC chair, or by giving away something worse-- our freedom and the tool for communication that WE THE PEOPLE paid for and developed.

Thank you, if you do the right thing for the American public, humanity, and all beings, and stand up to the corporate lobby.

Subject: Net Neutrality

Please vote to maintain the neutrality of the internet and avoid the slippery slope pressures from corporate interests positioned to gain and control the most are pushing us towards.

While they have contributed to it's development, these companies did not create the internet... nor would they have.

The government and it's regulatory arms have a responsibility to ensure the good of the public it represents, and not hand those decisions over to large corporate interests, which is what this could devolve into.

We don't want to be the one developed country that hands over possible control of our Internet, with the incredibly wide-ranging effects that would have on consumers, businesses, and government, over to corporations that only serve their own interests.

The FCC has done an admirable job of protecting our rights to free speech and our ability to access public information since it's inception, and this us on a course that will serve the interests of a very few at the cost of all of us.

Subject: Let's stop pretending that the internet is a "service"

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

The internet is a public utility. We can't live without it and the economy certainly can't function without it. It's time to stop this "fast lanes" and "slow lanes" discussion and move to regulate the internet as a public utility.

The 21st century internet is an integral part of our economy, democracy, and communication systems. America is absolutely dependent on an open internet operating on net neutrality principles.

As such, you have an obligation to regulate it as a utility. Please assert your Title II authority, and stop trying to appease

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

The telecommunications industry have been abusing their power to minimize competition. Somebody needs to tell Verizon and Time Warner Cable to give all customers a choice of access to the internet. Here in Brooklyn, NY, Verizon have refused to provision brownstone Park Slope with FIOS (fiber optic), in favor of other neighborhoods with larger buildings. If they had been allowed to do that with phone service, none of us would have had land lines for the past 75 years. We are stuck with Time Warner Cable, wireless, and ADSL, all of which are unsatisfactory for various reasons.

Title II of the Communications Act of 1934 already grants you the authority to declare the internet a public utility and provide greater regulation to the telecommunications industry. It's long past time to declare the internet a utility. So just DO IT!

Subject: Net Neutrality - Please act for an unbiased and open internet
Dear Sir, Madam;-

It is imperative that the Internet remain a neutral sphere, with equal speeds for all carriers and users. The internet is the single biggest communication device and network humanity has ever constructed. Thanks to it, ideas of democracy have spread out to everyone in every nation who has even a dial-up connection. Artists, Musicians, Engineers and Mathematicians have collaborated in forums to solve problems, advance their crafts and drive their local economies. With the click of a mouse button, someone in the US can chat live with someone in Australia! This is an incredible thing, and at this juncture in time, on the stage of History, You all in the FCC are the gate-keeper watching over this.

Please, please, please do not underestimate the importance of this issue, but move to protect this valuable and fantastical thing, and keep it open for all of us.

Yours Faithfully,

Alexander Cellmer

Subject: The internet is central to American life and the economy

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

Allowing internet service providers to create internet “fast lanes” and “slow lanes” would do nothing more than allow them to extort payments from companies like Netflix. It's time to admit that the internet is a public utility, not a private “service.”

Subject: FAO FCC Chair Tom Wheeler - Net Neutrality - Please act for an unbiased and open internet

Dear Mr Wheeler-

It is imperative that the Internet remain a neutral sphere, with equal speeds for all carriers and users. The internet is the single biggest communication device and network humanity has ever constructed. Thanks to it, ideas of democracy have spread out to everyone in every nation who has even a dial-up connection. Artists, Musicians, Engineers and Mathematicians have collaborated in forums to solve problems, advance their crafts and drive their local economies. With the click of a mouse button, someone in the US can chat live with someone in Australia! This is an incredible thing, and at this juncture in time, on the stage of History, You are the gate-keeper watching over this.

Please, please, please do not underestimate the importance of this issue, but move to protect this valuable and fantastical thing, and keep it open for all of us.

Yours Faithfully,

Alexander Cellmer

Your proposed path would open the door to widespread discrimination online. It would give Internet service providers the green light to implement pay-for-priority schemes that would be a disaster for startups, nonprofits and everyday Internet users who cannot afford these unnecessary tolls.

I urge you to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.

Chairman Wheeler,

I hope you find time to read this. Please reclassify Internet Service Providers as Title Two Common Carriers. This is a really important decision you're involved in, and a wrong choice could send us down a very bad path for consumers.

Moving against the concept of net neutrality would more strongly correlate our financial abilities with the loudness of our voices, and the opportunities we get. This correlation is already deeply stratifying our country, and is not fair.

Please reclassify ISPs as Title Two Common Carriers. Don't choose to send us down what promises to be a nasty road. Choices like this can't be easily undone.

Thank you for your time.

Dear FCC-

I am astonished that we, the people of the United States of America, have to tell you what a bad idea it is to have a Fast Lane policy around bandwidth!

For one second a little common sense as relates to kids researching and doing homework, or how a customer shopping a small business online not being able to quickly process their order will simply not purchase, or how the vulnerability of a prolonged open connection on a banking site could be leveraged! WHAT IS WRONG WITH YOU?

Make the Internet a utility, no fast lane for the 1%

The proposal before the FCC would give major telecom companies the power to decide who can, and who can't, benefit from fast internet speeds. This completely goes against the basis on which the Internet was founded, and I call on you to completely reject this proposal.

The Internet must remain fully accessible to everyone; only large corporations stand to benefit. I urge you to please consider the adverse effects that may have on smaller businesses and individuals who rely heavily on the Internet. Slower speed Internet service will have devastating repercussions and can kill businesses altogether.

The Internet has always been a level playing field for anyone to put out content, creativity, innovation and information. It's what's made independent media outlets like Democracy Now! reach a massive audience that would otherwise be relegated to choosing from corporate media channels like Fox News. It's the lifeline that allows small innovators to create a service that reaches almost everyone on the globe. But the FCC's proposal could kill this Internet democracy. Keep it that way!

It should be regulated as such, and for the benefit of all the people, not just those who can afford lawyers and lobbyists to push for their agenda so that they may benefit financially. Was it not my tax dollars that paid for the development of the internet? And is it not being shown that large corporations are paying a smaller percentage of taxes, if anything at all? And now there is a plan to let these non-payers -- non-supporters of democracy -- make it so what we mostly see is what they want us to see? This is beyond outrageous! It is nefarious!

You, my representative on the FCC should be going the other way, an open and free internet for all. Do not do this giveaway to Verizon and AT&T. Do keep our internet open and useful.

As an academic researcher, I can certainly vouch for the importance of net neutrality; my work depends on it and already suffers from exorbitant access fees to journals that make billions upon billions from restricting access to studies funded by the very tax payers they are charging. This would severely add to the burden, harming scientific pursuits and further hampering progress towards treatments and cures for diseases that blight humanity. Universities, and therefore students and researchers, will have to yet pay more for access to the information they need to function and thrive in this world. Please do not go through with this proposal. It is bad news, and you know it

It's what's made independent media outlets like Democracy Now! reach a massive audience that would otherwise be relegated to choosing from corporate media channels like Fox News. It's the lifeline that allows small innovators to create a service that reaches almost everyone on the globe. Leave our internet alone!

The level playing field is the fertile soil most of today's big modern technology were sown and

Dear FCC,

It is in Americas best economic interest that we preserve and strengthen Net Neutrality. It creates an even playing field and allows anyone to access or run their businesses, communicate freely and continually push the boundaries of technology and innovation. Something America is known for. I fear that if you allow these corporations an avenue to monetize and capitalize on the very thing that makes the internet amazing; a currently free and open line of direct communication with no specific bias or set discrimination against a set people or party, you will have successfully destroyed the past decade of technological revolution. This would be a economic catastrophe seeing as how this is one of Americas most important areas of economic growth it behooves you to preserve and encourage it. I urge you to do not put more power into the hands of these corporations. Let we, the American people decide our technological and economic future!

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

The internet is central to American life and the modern economy. It makes no sense to regulate it as a private “service.” It is a public utility and should be treated as such.

Please declare the internet to be a public utility

President Obama promised us net neutrality. What is his or any other political promise worth?

Zip. I reckon 90% of people in office are guilty of bait and switch...this is another classic.

The corporate “fix” is in, again.

And with the Courts stacked with pro-corporate appeasers and fund-raisers we've just about put “America on eBay” – available for the taking by the shock troops of K-street or China.

Government has become a big pop machine: Put money in, and out pops corporate policy.

Is that what the Founders envisioned? Is that what our Service members fought and died for?

How's the pop taste?

As a student and educator, the idea the information could be assigned privilege by a provider is abhorrent. One of my favorite things about the internet is the possibility to learn new things, to engage with media I might not otherwise get to see, and to participate in conversations I might not otherwise know of, let alone be a part of. Please choose to keep the internet as neutral as possible.

Equal access to the Internet, by far the most powerful media today, is crucial to the democracy we so cherish in the US. If powerful corporations have an edge over individual citizens and smaller organizations - with greater speed of delivery - that is a terrible move away from democracy. Please do not bend to the requests of corporations now. Net Neutrality is vitally important to all Americans.

The Internet has always been a level playing field for anyone to put out content, creativity, innovation and information. It's what's made independent media outlets like Democracy Now! reach a massive audience that would otherwise be relegated to choosing from corporate media channels like Fox News. It's the lifeline that allows small innovators to create a service that reaches almost everyone on the globe. But the FCC's proposal could kill this Internet democracy.

If the FCC passes these rules, huge companies could pay to make their websites faster and easier to use than all of their smaller competitors. The largest and richest broadband providers like Comcast and Verizon argue that they need more money to invest in new networks. But in reality, they are simply increasing profits by building up monopolies that just benefit their shareholders.

"Net neutrality" should be preserved. Even though the "internet" is in most ways a utility like electricity and water, it is also an open platform for free speech and the broadcasting of ideas. Of course this means that internet subscribers who aren't using the services that heavily burden their ISP will be subsidizing others' use of those services, and everyone will likely have to pay more for the internet service they are using. That is still a far better result.

I want my government to consider the Internet a Public Utility. It should not be treated as a movie theater or fast food store. Both of these I have a choice to spend my money or go somewhere else. There is only one Internet .

Let's show the world that we are a true democracy, and not a corporatocracy enslaved to large corporations.

This is an absolute outrage! Obama promised net neutrality. What is his (or any other political promise) worth?

Zip. I reckon 90% of people in office are guilty of bait and switch...this is another classic. And OBVIOUS!

The corporate "fix" is in, again.

And with the Courts (stacked with pro-corporate appeasers and fund-raisers) we've just about put "America on eBay" – available for the taking by the shock troops of K-street.

Government has become a big pop machine: Put money in, and out pops corporate policy.

Is that what the Founders envisioned? Is that what our Service members fought and died for? NO.

Or are ya'll getting a few sips of the pop?

We are watching.

Please reject this proposal! We have lost so many rights and freedoms already that it seems like an open internet is all we have left. It is our last defense against corporate domination and control, and the only way we have to know what's really going on in the world. The majority of Americans already have such an unfair advantage and so many financial obstacles to hurdle that this doesn't seem like such a great country anymore. The government is supposed to be protecting it's people, not feeding us to the lions!

Big companies like AT&T and Comcast should not be allowed to decide who gets what. You broke up AT&T when they were a monopoly as you should have. Now you are contemplating giving them back a huge amount of that power to control our lives and finances. Just because you are including other companies, like Comcast, doesn't mean it is not too small of a concentration of power. Please do not allow this!

The internet is the one place left where everyone begins on an even playing field. Sure, you can pay others to host ads about your site on their site. But it is completely unfair and simply not right to give any company a monopoly on the internet speeds of each website. That essentially, once again, gives the richest companies and richest people more ability to be heard - and that is certainly not constitutional.

Internet is a utility like phone and electricity. My entire job and over 50% of my husband's exists because of the internet. Ending Net Neutrality will kill small business, and will certainly kill nonprofits (we both work in education) and those entities without the massive resources of big business. Not a fair market!

FCC Chair and Members,

We urge you to keep the internet neutrality. Save the open Internet.

Reject the the proposal in front of the FCC that would allow Comcast, AT&T and other gig telecon companies to decide who can benefit from from fast internet speed, while slowing down, or even blocking everyone else and making millions in profits from it.

Hi,

You're stepping on two key principles of the US should you opt to allow these mega communication corporations have more control over the the price & speed at we receive information. Firstly, that would be stepping on the toes of freedom of speech, currently the internet is an amazing tool that allows your average person to express their ideas and opinions, at a very reasonable rate without fear of censorship or bias based on the dollar amount given to their internet provider for the speed at which their information is available. Next, the ability for entrepreneurs, small & not-for-profit businesses to have an easy, inexpensive venue to reach a wider audience. There are already enough financial pressures for people just starting out & those companies that see very little profit without the added concern of attempting to compete with megamillion corporations to maintain a website. For example, my mom was laid off from her job 6 months ago. For many years she's maintained a very small flower business on the side, now that she's no longer steadily employed, I thought it would be good to set her up with a website to gain more clients to build it into a viable way for her to earn a living. Now, in order to maintain a speedy website, I'm going to have to pay more money?!? No thank you.

What's more, the nonprofit organization I work for depends on the free flow of information over the internet, and the loss of a free and open internet could be potentially devastating to our mission. The fast lane proposal is an inherently flawed idea. If any other service industry proposed this idea it would be shot down immediately. If your waiter told you that because you and your friends ordered so much food you would have to pay extra to bring the food to you. So you'd have to pay for the food, then you'd have to pay again so the wait staff would bring you the food you already paid for.

There isn't enough competition in internet service providers as it is, and the speed and reliability we pay so much for is much, much, slower than in countries like Korea, and Japan.

If Net Neutrality is done away with we will be dealing with a monopoly very soon. We've already seen that to be the ultimate goal of the ISPs. Just like Comcast wants to merge with Time Warner right now.

Please make rules that protect Net Neutrality, and while you're at it please make it so that our internet speed increases to rival the rest of the world.

As such, you have an obligation to regulate it as a utility. Please assert your Title II authority, and stop trying to appease the telecom giants at the expense of everyone else.

The internet is the last bastion of freedom and democracy planet-wide. It is a game-changer for the good of so many! Shut- ins and people in otherwise restrictive situations come alive in the virtual universe where all men and women are created equal.

Already complex graphics slow down home/small systems. Do not, I implore you, make money the god of your thinking and actions. The FCC exists to keep the airwaves clear and open for all. There is too much corruption in government. (Globally and even in the US)... Please keep your agency clean and above being bought by already wealthy interests that greedily want always more. They strangle the life and creativity out of this once great nation... Hope for the nations.

Thank you for choosing the righteous path of liberty and justice for all!

The Internet needs to be free and open. This isn't something that only affects America. If ISPs can choose who gets faster traffic, big, established companies will pay to keep competing startups down. The US will fall behind other countries in innovation. The Internet is a big deal. Without net neutrality, we might as well not even be on it. Reclassify Internet Service Providers as Title II common carriers and end this madness.

We need to keep the internet as an equitable framework where communication and business can be competitive. Giving telecom companies the right to take away this level playing field for other businesses, social media, and the many other uses for the internet is very unconstitutional and not in the American spirit. Act on behalf of the American people, not a few corporate entities. They will be fine and extremely profitable without control of our digital lives.

I develop websites for small businesses. These folks don't have a lot of money. Without net neutrality, their sites will be relegated to the slow lane (or end up in the slow lane after all the big companies buy fast lanes). Slow loading sites are more often abandoned by viewers than not, which would make paying for a faster lane an imperative, an imperative most of my clients can not afford. Faced with the choice of high cost vs. "just use FaceBook," the outcome is self-evident — I will be unable to sustain my business.

Preserve Net Neutrality. Stand up for small businesses, for main street and for freedom.

Internet should be considered a utility like gas and water. It's outrageous that these big companies would be able to control who gets faster internet than others, by paying more. And now also the bigger businesses to pay more for their sites to come up more and smaller businesses having to pay as well. And the small business cannot be competitive because they don't have the funds. I own a small business, please rule the internet as a utility, so the common people and the poor can stay competitive and just as informed as the people who have lots of money to pay for these services.

The internet should be a utility, because my family and business use it everyday as part of business, studying for school, research for information, world news, politics, world events, local events, gps etc. Please, I urge you, the internet needs to be a common utility.

Our tax dollars paid for a free and open Internet. WE OWN IT, NOT THE CORPORATIONS. Not only should you protect net neutrality, you should make it a public utility. If you want the name Tom Wheeler do be held in contempt and ignominy, pander to the greedy corporations and line your pockets. If you want to be a hero, remembered for your actions on behalf of the people, save net neutrality and make the Internet a public utility.

Clearly the vast majority of the public is on the losing end if the FCC votes to allow internet traffic prioritization based on the 'pay to play' proposal being pushed by the telecom industry.

Maintaining Net Neutrality is extremely important. There should be no preference given to a company whether it is smaller, or larger. Every company must be treated the same. Losing Net Neutrality is a disaster in the making. Throwing money at a situation, buying people off, buying "power" is purely corrupt and does not belong in the free world. A country that looks like that is China, not the United States or any of the other free countries of the world.

My support for Net Neutrality is based on the common sense understanding that every person already has an uphill battle to make a real difference in this world. Curing cancer, ending poverty in a certain region of the world and the general well-being of the planet can hang in the balance of this vote. Just imagine all the great minds being muted and shut out from the inability to join the conversation....any conversation. That would be the worst form of censorship in my lifetime. Vote smart. Vote for a bright future, not for corporate greed. Keep the access to knowledge un-restricted. The history of mankind may depend upon that freedom.

In hours, the US communications regulator will decide whether to move forward with a proposal that could kill the Internet as we know it. It could go either way -- but if we act fast we can win the votes we need to tip the balance.

The proposal in front of the FCC would allow Comcast, AT&T and other big telecom companies to decide who can benefit from fast Internet speed -- while slowing down, or even blocking, everyone else -- and making millions in profit from it!

The good news is there's a major backlash -- working with advocates, we pressured the FCC with a million strong campaign, and now major tech companies, investors and members of Congress are slamming this dangerous proposal! Let's urgently flood FCC members with messages demanding our Internet stay free and open ahead of today's key meeting:

In this day and age, the Internet is a gateway to a world other than reality, which for some, can be extremely harsh. Disappearing onto the computer for even a few minutes can be life saving. People connect with family and friends, with people who they would have never met otherwise and care about even though they may live thousands of miles away. By taking that ability away, or slowing it down, people who may find their few little joys in life on the Internet be abruptly silenced. Those they have grown close to online, perhaps because of the lack of ability in real life to do so, won't be able to contact them. Places where people make a living will be extinguished, taking away their income.

Please do not go through with this proposal.

As a young aspiring entrepreneur I hope the internet can still be a fair-play platform for small businesses and individuals. Internet presence is increasingly important for social media connections and promotion. Please, don't let it tip to the side of big money. Greedy corporations don't help the economy or the country, small, local companies and cooperatives do. They need neutrality to be able to launch in a crowded market.

The Internet has always been a level playing field for anyone to put out content, creativity, innovation and information. It's what's made independent media outlets like Democracy Now! reach a massive audience that would otherwise be relegated to choosing from corporate media channels like Fox News. It's the lifeline that allows small innovators to create a service that reaches almost everyone on the globe. But the FCC's proposal could kill this Internet democracy.

If the FCC passes these rules, huge companies could pay to make their websites faster and easier to use than all of their smaller competitors. The largest and richest broadband providers like Comcast and Verizon argue that they need more money to invest in new networks. But in reality, they are simply increasing profits by building up monopolies that just benefit their shareholders.

In hours, the US communications regulator will decide whether to move forward with a proposal that could kill the Internet as we know it. It could go either way -- but if we act fast we can win the votes we need to tip the balance.

The proposal in front of the FCC would allow Comcast, AT&T and other big telecom companies to decide who can benefit from fast Internet speed -- while slowing down, or even blocking, everyone else -- and making millions in profit from it!

The good news is there's a major backlash -- working with advocates, we pressured the FCC with a million strong campaign, and now major tech companies, investors and members of Congress are slamming this dangerous proposal! Let's urgently flood FCC members with messages demanding our Internet stay free and open ahead of today's key meeting:

Do not allow cable and telephone companies to give preferential treatment to those that choose to pay them. The Internet is a bastion of freedom. It is changing the world and this will make it harder for smaller sites to compete and get information into the public's minds. Don't impede human progress in the name of profits.

Please build any net neutrality argument upon solid legal standing. Specifically, this means reclassifying broadband under Title II of the Telecommunications Act of 1934.

Net neutrality is democracy. The will of the people should always supercede the want of corporations. For corporations are profit driven and by nature exploitative. Companies shouldn't be allowed to control internet speeds or even block people. it would be a private decision of a profit driven corporation over citizens who pay for what they believe will be complete unfiltered unblocked access to a free and transparent platform such as the internet.

Subject: Open Internet

The FCC has been charged with being the governmental watchdog of the people's rights. Thus far, the Supreme Court has not explicitly said corporations are people. Therefore, the FCC is bound by their charged mission to safeguard the people's rights to a free and open internet in the face of ever growing ISP profits. The US invented the internet and yet we are consistently falling behind in both speed and price because of the "competition" provided for by our monopolistic/duopolistic ISP regime. Please reference the FCC's own website<<http://www.fcc.gov/maps/connect-compete-home-broadband-coverage-map>> to see the number of "choices" the typical consumer has when choosing an ISP. The number essentially becomes a but a single choice due to regional noncompetition among ISPs. This tacit approval of regional monopoly power has led to ever increasing prices for internet access with speeds that rival third world countries.

Further, the FCC has let ISPs become media conglomerates that have a vested interest in destroying net neutrality. Look no further to Netflix's peering arrangements with Comcast and Verizon to show the conflict of interest the FCC has created and let fester. Without a doubt, media is the largest source of revenue of cable providers. Under the FCC's proposal these cable companies would be allowed to fast lane their services and any company that was able to spend more money for faster content delivery. This effectively kills of the next Netflix, it gives the ISPs, who should be conflicted out of the ISP business, to decide the winners and losers of the market. Competition in the ISP arena is a farce. The ISPs claim poverty, yet continually post record multi-billion dollar quarterly profits and insist they have absolutely no revenue to invest in improving their infrastructure.

Declare ISPs a Title II common carrier. ISPs should be regulated and treated no different than any utility. Until that time, the FCC should be placed in the "slow" lane so they may experience with the rest of the US will shortly live with if Chairman Wheeler's plans come to fruition.

Broadband should be defined as a utility and should NEVER be under the control of corporations or any other entity and no one should be allowed to slow down or block traffic to or from ANY site.

As a Librarian of a small rural library, I know first hand how important fast access is to average Americans. Corporations already make life hard for all but the very rich. DON'T MAKE IT WORSE. REJECT any and all slow/fast proposals forever by making broadband a UTILITY, which it is. It serves the SAME function as land lines and deserves protection from corporate overreach.

The internet is the greatest invention of our generation and its very premise is based on equal access. Eliminating this equality, while good for business, is horrible for humanity.

Watching TV shows aside, it could prevent the next Facebook from being started. It could limit education. It could get in the way of the next economic boom.

Consider the larger good for humanity instead of what is good for company's bottom lines. Don't listen to them, listen to us.

If you haven't noticed, the internet is by design, not a centralized network, that is the point.

What's funny is how many corporate perspectives of free market and decentralization tends towards and old model of centralized power simply shifted to the corporate rather than government realm. Open your eyes.

The internet is actually a great model of freedom, free market and a decentralized network.

My suggestion is to stand back, step down, observe and learn about living systems, systems theory and how silly it is what you are trying to do. Try participating rather than ruling. Set your example by living it, not forcing limits on others, which will surely backfire either way.

I ask that you help the net remain a place of free connection of creativity and mass information and disable it from becoming a corporate competitive field - as if we need another one of those. There is a certain type of democracy involving the internet in which anyone who has the right tools can connect. In short, it is an equal chance for everyone. To put dollar signs up for companies to increase the speed of my internet would not be so democratic because your speed would be faster than mine.

The internet has the power to unite like minded people who together can make the world a better place (more peaceful and understanding to others which we would have never known about). There should be no control over freedom of information. If so then you sacrifice one's ability to form their own opinion and create new ideas.

It is unacceptable to create a fast lane and a slow lane on the internet using the FCC to carry out a corporate agenda intending to increase private profits using public infrastructure.

I demand the internet remain neutral, that is, not favor anyone with paid speed increases, which end up being for the largest, most monopolistic media companies.

Keep the internet neutral, preserve net neutrality, and do not allow a two-tiered organization of the internet with fast lanes and slow lanes.

Reclassify the internet as a public utility, or as a common carrier, and place the internet where it belongs, in the public realm.

Subject: Save Net Neutrality!

We don't need to partition the internet into fast and slow lanes. This is a mistake. Competition only works when the playing field is level. We should not give artificial advantages to the telecom monopolies. My internet prices are already too high, and our bandwidth is much lower than most other developed nations' internet.

The world will become an even more lousy place if you give corporations more control over the internet. Many people could drop their internet services because the wants of corporate executives were realized instead of the needs of the internet society. There are many other negative outcomes that worry me. The rich are rich enough.

Don't corporations have too much control over our lives as it is? They already control who can benefit from fast speed Internet through their pricing. I can't afford to have it in my home and I would bet that there are many other people who can't afford it either.

So, instead of giving these huge corporations more power than they deserve, why can't you give some of that power back to the people? We deserve it! I want fast speed Internet at an affordable price!

I am in support of Net Neutrality. I am not in agreement to tip the balance in favor of those who have the most to gain and the least to lose. The potential to hold the internet hostage and leverage services without checks and neutral balance is just too great of a monopoly for those who would be, and are in the position to buy their way to the top.

It reeks of special interests and the building of a large .Com-Caste system.

Some mistakes are so huge they can never be undone or fixed. Eliminating Net Neutrality would be one of those. We need corporations, but we need ones that act responsibly. This is a clear case of profits overriding the public good. It's time for the FCC to act in the public good. Keep the internet free.

Hello,

It's time to start regulating the companies out to abuse the Internet. Comcast, Verizon, and others have shown that they're only into an "open" Internet when it's most convenient to them. Tom Wheeler's alleged proposal (being revealed today) is to open fast lanes, thereby giving more control to these companies. Please reclassify these providers as Title II common carriers and put us one step closer to saving the Internet.

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

To the FCC——

Please build any net neutrality argument upon solid legal standing. Specifically, this means reclassifying broadband under Title II of the Telecommunications Act of 1934.

706 authority from the Telecommunications Act has been repeatedly struck down in court after legal challenges by telecom companies. Take the appropriate steps to prevent this from happening again.

Sincerely,

Alice Shaw

Please keep our internet free.

It has been long proven that when something becomes under a government or corporate control, corruption occurs. The people who would control the internet won't be thinking about what may be essential to my or my family's survival, only how much money they can make.

It is already expensive just to have internet service and until 7 months ago I had gone 10 years without it because I could not fit it or a computer into my budget.

I could go on and on about keeping in touch with family and other internet uses but the truth is, having someone else decide what I should see or how fast MY internet should be or even if I should have internet is an infringement on my freedom.

Please keep the internet out of government and / or corporate hands.

Thank you,

The internet is one of the most powerful tools we currently have for freely disseminating information, decentralizing commerce, and organizing groups of people. In a democratic society, we need to maintain the free and unhindered functionality of such a tool. The internet is an insane domain already as it is, but that's because it's a reflection of the insane variety of people that use it. I don't know to what extent internet providers would actually drag down internet access, but I do know that there are other countries with fast, easy-to-access internet, while we with our huge corporation are so caught up in trying to milk every last cent out of our consumers that we've driven up the cost of everything in the process. Our legislators aren't increasing minimum wage because we're expecting that businesses will hire less so they won't have to pay as much for labor. I enjoy having a capitalist system, but it's up to you if you want to capitalize at someone else's expense.

Please keep the Internet free and open for teachers, students, the millions of low-income families, and others who wish to do good in the world but cannot afford to pay more for access. Eliminating net neutrality would be a huge blow to an already faltering "democracy" that is largely controlled by the wealthy.

Subject: Net Neutrality
Dear Chairman,

The current proposed path would open the door to widespread discrimination online.

It would give Internet service providers the green light to implement pay-for-priority schemes that would be a disaster for startups, nonprofits and everyday Internet users who cannot afford these unnecessary tolls.

The ISPs were only to be conduits that carried data to and fro as quickly and efficiently as possible, without considering its source. It maintained a “neutral” stance, thus, “net neutrality.” But Wheeler’s new proposal kills this.

I urge you to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.

Please, stand for people and not the business models of large ISPs. People not profits. They only want to serve their own business models. Innovation to them means creating more ways to make money not provide better serve. This is evident in despite the fact that they've been awarded money to 'upgrade' they still got voted the worst company in America. We don't need the worst company in America to be larger or operate unregulated. Please Chairman, reclassify broadband to stop this madness.

Thank You

Subject: The internet isn't a private service

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

The modern economy would collapse without the internet and American life would be extraordinarily disrupted. It's a simple fact that the internet is a public utility, not a private service. It's time we regulated it as such.

The internet was developed by the United States military a COMPLETELY taxpayer funded organization. The internet is a PUBLIC utility bought and paid for by the PUBLIC. The internet belongs to the PEOPLE not private enterprise. We do not mind that private enterprise makes a SMALL profit from MAINTAINING the system but that is ALL they do. Private enterprise MAINTAINS the system they do NOT own the system. The citizens of the United States of America OWN the internet. We paid for it, we own it! And as FCC employees of We The People, your employers, keep that in mind.

Subject: Please Institute/Enforce Net Neutrality
Hello,

I understand that the FCC is soliciting public comment on the regulation of ISPs.

In order to safeguard the interests of the consumer, small and start-up businesses, and innovation in general, I implore you to prevent ISPs from charging Internet-based service providers for preferential treatment. Such behavior allows a few large companies to exploit their near monopoly to the detriment of the rest of the business and consumer communities. If it is not possible to prevent this type of arrangement under current regulations, I urge you to reclassify ISPs as common carriers. This is no reason that firms that provide Internet access should be allowed to abuse their position in the marketplace any more than the provider of any other modern commodity.

Sincerely,
Ryan Berse

Subject: Classify Broadband internet under Title II

Since the DC Court threw out the Federal Communications Commission's Open Internet rules last week, "network neutrality" is a glaring problem that demands prompt action. The good news is that the solution is pretty simple. It doesn't require a new telecommunications statute replete with time-consuming years of legislative horse-trading and special interest lobbying. All it requires is an FCC big enough to own up to its previous mistakes and courageous enough to put our communications future back on track. The solution: reclassify broadband as "telecommunications" under Title II of the Communications Act.

The DC Circuit Court of Appeals pointed the way out of the dilemma created when the FCC reclassified broadband as an "information service" over ten years ago. The Court held that the Commission has authority to make decisions on broadband and that these decisions are entitled to considerable deference by the judiciary. The FCC could have decided on a different path and still garnered court approval. Importantly, it can also change course if it justifies the reasons for the change. What the judges said last week was that the Commission justified its Open Internet rules the wrong way. Had the agency just kept treating advanced telecommunications as “telecommunications,” its Internet Freedom rules would have passed muster. But by calling broadband an “information service,” the FCC put it beyond the reach of Title II which applies to telecommunications. And Title II is where such things as consumer protections, privacy guarantees, public safety, and ubiquitous build-out requirements pertain. Who, other than the big companies trying to gain market power over broadband, would ever have argued that Congress intended broadband communications to be stripped of such elemental consumer and public interest protections?

The time is now for the FCC to classify broadband as Title II. Without this step, we are playing fast-and-loose with the most opportunity-creating technology in all of communications history. Without this step, we are guaranteeing an Internet future of toll-booths, gatekeepers and preferential carriage. Without this step, we stifle innovation, put consumers under the thumb of special interests, and pull the props from under the kind of rich civic dialogue that only open and non-discriminatory communications can provide Saying that the solution is simple is not the same as saying it is easy. No matter what course the Commission chooses, powerful forces will contest it. If the Commission, instead of reclassifying broadband as what it is, attempts some new and novel reading of the statute, it is just inviting more years of detour and delay. And every month of delay only gives the big telephone and cable companies more time and opportunity to make the Internet...theirs.

Hello,

I am writing concerning the proposed FCC rules concerning Net Neutrality. I would like to express my concern over creating a fast lane for internet traffic as I believe all internet traffic needs to be treated equally and not based on whether a content provider can or is willing to pay to be in the ‘fast lane’.

The only solution I find acceptable is re-classification of Internet Service Providers as Title II Common Carriers.

Subject: Losing Net Neutrality Means Losing Our Business
Dear Chairman Wheeler,

I would like to respectfully ask you to please vote against any legislation or bills in which net neutrality would be changed or altered.

My husband and I started a tiny business here in Massachusetts 20 years ago and the ONLY reason we have a business is via the Internet. We have no store front, and never will. Our product is too much of a niche product.

Our business has grown to where it is not the largest support our family of three has. We cannot afford to have it fail. We will go bankrupt.

We have created a market for our product, cloth-covered electrical wire (at www.sundialwire.com) and now have competitors from China and elsewhere with very deep pockets, which we do NOT have. There is no way we won't go out of business if we don't have a level playing field at least on the Internet.

We buy only US-made wire, we buy US-produced yarn, and we braid the wire ourselves here in Massachusetts. It is entirely American-made and we are committed to keeping it that way as we have been from the very start. Please don't put us, and all the struggling small businesses trying to make a comeback for US manufacturing, out of business.

Thank you for taking the time to listen.

Yours Sincerely,

Hilary Kent

Subject: Let’s stop pretending that the internet is a “service”

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

The internet is a public utility. We can’t live without it and the economy certainly can’t function without it. Start-up new businesses and the creation of new jobs depend upon it. And, a healthy democracy depends upon having citizens with Internet access at the lowest prices possible. Other nations outperform the USA by providing their citizens with cheaper and faster Internet access.

So, it’s time to stop this “fast lanes” and “slow lanes” discussion and reclassify the internet as telecommunications = a public utility.

I want to keep Net Neutrality; real Net Neutrality not the fake Net Neutrality in the latest policy proposed by FCC Chairman Wheeler.

I want to keep the freedom to choose the websites I visit, and not my ISP (like it does with cable TV).

I want and demand real broadband competition everywhere, not the fake competition where the corporate ISPs have gentlemen's agreements that divided up the country so cable never competes against fiber. Example: Boston, where I live, will never be the world-class city it wants to be because fiber is not available. That is a shame and embarrassment.

I want local laws removed so local governments and their residents can develop broadband utilities, if they choose. According to industry experts, there are laws in 19 states that prohibit local governments from developing their own (cheaper) broadband solutions. That is corporate welfare.

I want everyone to have broadband at the lowest prices possible: for education and schools, to create jobs, and to encourage entrepreneurs to start new businesses. Chairman Wheeler's proposal keeps prices high, benefits large corporate ISPs, and does nothing to help consumers.

Dear Chairman Wheeler:

I am writing today to urge you to reject Chairman Tom Wheeler's proposal to allow internet service providers (ISP) to charge different rates for faster access to websites willing to pay, or to allow any discretion on the part of ISPs to manage the flow of information on the internet based on who the information provider is, or their willingness to pay for access.

The internet was founded on the principle of net neutrality. And the success of that principle speaks for itself. There is no reason to allow ISPs to manage the flow of information on the internet to maximize their profits to the detriment of every other stakeholder in the internet.

Please reject Chairman Wheeler's proposal, and any other proposal that diverges from the principle of net neutrality.

Erika Romano

Hello,

I am writing on behalf of my family. Please do not allow net neutrality to end. There are not enough options in regards to ISPs out there that give consumers such as myself realistic options. In my state the ISP options are very few and ending net neutrality will not foster more ISP choices. In the process it will eliminate the next "Netflix" or "Hulu" from ever coming about. How can a small start-up ever compete with the big hogs without net neutrality?

Please bring back/continue with net neutrality – do not end it. Let us keep this next frontier of job creation open and fertile for the generations to come instead of letting Comcast decide who gets to succeed.

Subject: Net Neutrality
To Whom It May Concern,

I have been following with interest your ongoing proceeding on how best to re-implement the “net neutrality” rules. Like you, I believe it is critical that we maintain a free and open Internet, where consumers are not blocked from accessing the websites of their choice and providers do not use their control over the last mile to stifle competition.

As you consider how best to move forward to achieve these goals, I write to share my concerns with reports that the Commission may be considering achieving these goals by reclassifying broadband Internet access service as a “Title II” common carrier service. In the years that broadband service has been subjected to relatively little regulation, investment and deployment have flourished and broadband competition has increased, all to the benefit of consumers and the American economy.

While we still have further to go to ensure that the benefits of broadband reach all Americans, I am concerned that opening the door to subjecting broadband service to a wide array of regulatory burdens and restrictions, including imposing Title II, might halt this progress. I respectfully urge you to consider the effect that regressing to a Title II approach might have on private companies’ ability to attract capital and their continued incentives to invest and innovate, as well as the potentially negative impact on job creation that might result from any reduction in funding or investment. I share your goals of keeping the Internet open to all. I do not believe that a Title II approach is the best means of achieving this goal for our country.

Thank you for your work on this very important issue.

This rule does more than promote the corporatization of internet access--it relegates independent sites to an inferior internet on the 'slow lane' and creates a HUGE barrier to entry for new start ups that may compete with--or directly challenge--incumbent technologies and corporations. This rule will KILL start-up innovation and enshrine the power of Big Telecom, who will make the internet as awful as cable television.

Please protect Net neutrality to preserve an open internet and urge the FCC to assert reclassification authority of broadband under title II.

Commissioner Wheeler,

I am writing to ask you to maintain neutrality on the internet and to regulate broadband service as we do with phones and other utilities. The unregulated broadband community has been a disaster for the US, where we have some of the slowest and most expensive broadband in the developed world. Unlike our world class regulated phone, gas and electric utilities US broadband providers are widely viewed by the public as corrupt and monopolistic. Under the current situation cable companies can force expensive bundle plans on consumers refusing to upgrade the broadband network, all in effort to gain profits to please Wall St. investors over customers. It is time to take the Cable bull by the horns and regulate this market to insure all are treated fairly, especially consumers.

Subject: Proposed Internet “Fast Lane” FCC Rules
May 15, 2014

Mr. Tom Wheeler & FCC Commission,

I am writing to you today as a college student studying IT. I have an acute understanding of the current situation with the proposed “internet fast lane” rules and I am aware of the technical and circumstantial details around the recent Netflix/Comcast event.

I must say that I was not expecting this from your office at this time; the proposed rules do not make sense and do not follow the FCC charter. In 2009 the FCC drafted similar rules because of the events surrounding Comcast and Comcast’s arbitrary throttling of peer-to-peer traffic; in that case the FCC lost their case when the DC district court ruled that Comcast is classified as an “information service.” Recently, the FCC finished writing the “Open Internet” rules and once again the FCC was sued by Verizon. The FCC lost their case once again – in both of these cases the court urged the FCC to reclassify these ISPs as a Title II communications company if the office of the FCC was serious about drafting rules that these companies must follow.

I’m aware that Title II has some stringent rules and that these rules may not all be applicable to internet service providers like Verizon, AT&T and Comcast. However, I would remind you that the FCC has the power of forbearance; the office can choose what rules will be imposed. Were these internet service providers classified as “telecommunications services”, as the FCC has been encouraged to do by these two court cases, then it does not have to enforce all the rules under Title II.

Certainly I have been surprised by these proposed “internet fast lane” rules; they were entirely unexpected at this time. I do not see how they are substantially different than the rules put forth in the previous two failed court cases. Also, I would not expect to entertain such a proposal unless and until the FCC reclassifies these ISPs as telecommunications companies under Title II.

In point of fact, Comcast has already negotiated a “fast lane” deal with Netflix. However, Comcast is selling service tiers to customers that specify a speed (e.g. 50 megabits per second) and a byte cap (250 gigabytes, as specified in the terms-of-service). As a customer of Comcast, I may elect to use some or all of the capacity I have purchased on Netflix services.

I am confident that should the FCC investigate the particulars of Comcast’s activities in this case, they would have an open-and-shut antitrust case. To use a telephone analogy, this is no different than a cellular telephone provider charging a call recipient "extra" to "help prevent the call from being dropped."

This is exactly the same type of abusive conduct that the FCC tried to deal with in the court cases in 2009 and again with Verizon more recently.

Please, halt what is being done with these “internet fast lane” rules, and simply reclassify internet service providers as Telecommunications companies under Title II of the 1996 telecommunications act. It is a faster, simpler, and more effective way to accomplish your goals.

Sincerely,

Michael Brough

Subject: Do not compromise Net neutrality
Dear FCC commissioners:

Please vote to protect the concept of Net neutrality and preserve an open and free Internet for everyone — no fast lane of access for the one percent willing to pay luxury rates while the 99 percent sit and wait in the slow lanes. Please don't make access to the Net for sale to the highest bidders! Free an open access to the Net is essential to a vigorous democracy, and the Net becomes more and more important as all other means of expression and access slowly, but surely, are bought by the one percent.

Sincerely,
Deborah Lennon

As such, you have an obligation to regulate it as a utility. Please assert your Title II authority, and stop trying to appease the telecom giants at the expense of everyone else.

Since my job in book production was outsourced to India, I have been working as a freelancer, and all of my work depends on the Internet for receiving and delivering copyediting jobs. That my line of work would be not only outsourced, but then also sidelined by commercial interests online, is to add insult to injury. There is no benefit in undermining U.S. taxpayers and their abilities to be productive.

Subject: Net Neutrality

Mr. Wheeler,

It is most important that net neutrality be preserved. This means not only that the Internet remain open, but that it remain free of the control of ISPs and other moneyed interests to the detriment of the American people. President Obama did not appoint you to enable this to happen. His goal was to appoint someone to head the FCC to uphold complete freedom and neutrality of the Internet, not to try to water it down by talking in circles about how your plan is preserving pure net neutrality when it is not. What needs to be done is to keep the Internet as a common carrier which has been reclassified a utility, which would forestall creating multiple lanes on the Internet. You need to go back to this ideal standard that Pres. Obama has established. You see the crowds of people outside the FCC offices today and the past few days, and hear from the vast numbers writing and calling, all to tell you this. Average American people will not stand for yet another chipping away at our rights and economic wellbeing in sacrifice to the huge corporations and 1%ers.

Merry Foxworth

“The United States is getting accustomed to a completely crazy level of inequality,” [Thomas] Piketty said, with a degree of wonder. “People say that reducing inequality is radical. I think that tolerating the level of inequality the United States tolerates is radical.”

[Emmanuel] Saez added, “Absent drastic policy changes, I doubt that income inequality will decline on its own.”

Thomas Piketty and Emmanuel Saez are two of the most prominent economists studying wealth and income inequality today.

Chairman Tom Wheeler

Dear Chairman Wheeler,

As an Illinois consumer who depends on a fast, affordable web connection, I am concerned that a free and open Internet is now in grave danger.

We are troubled by reports that the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) plans to propose new rules that would open the door for big Internet providers to offer a "fast lane" to the highest bidders. Such a proposal would water down consumer protections, serve as a slippery slope to discrimination against certain web traffic, and force consumers like me to suffer higher rates and slower speeds.

That violates the spirit of "net neutrality."

Please, stand up for consumers, protect net neutrality, and fight for the free and open Internet.

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

To the FCC——

Please build any net neutrality argument upon solid legal standing. Specifically, this means reclassifying broadband under Title II of the Telecommunications Act of 1934.

706 authority from the Telecommunications Act has been repeatedly struck down in court after legal challenges by telecom companies. Take the appropriate steps to prevent this from happening again.

Sincerely,

Vincent Eaglin

Title II of the Communications Act of 1934 already grants you the authority to declare the internet a public utility and provide greater regulation to the telecommunications industry. It's long past time to declare the internet a utility.

I do, however, take exception fyi megacorps dictating the lives and freedoms of individuals...our country is becoming less and less a democracy and moving further away from what makes America great. The internet has become the primary means of communication for both private and commercial information. it has inspired new ideas and has nurtured many of the new businesses that continue to create new jobs and opportunities. The proposed changes would crush this innovation and flexibility by making the current internet leaders a privileged and protected group of special interests who would eventually become fossils themselves.
Please protect our internet freedom from special interests. Please don't force innovation to migrate to foreign companies.

The internet needs to be treated as a public utility. It was not designed to be another tool for large corporations to monitor based on their interests of financial gain and control. It is imperative that it remain neutral and this idea of fast lanes be shut down once and for all.

If you bow down to this these corporations you sell our freedom of information with it. Please do what you know in your heart is right. All of these tweaks in favor of corporate gain eventually result in the loss of the soul of this country and all of its' people.

My AT&T virtual monopoly internet service is poor enough as it is. I feel like I am already in the slow lane at the receiving end. When websites are charged more in order to maintain their current speed and not be put in the slow lane, the web will die and America will have become the last place to do business, work, study or thrive in any way. The real intent of this plan is only about increasing profits by building up monopolies that just benefit shareholders and the 1%ers. How can the 1% income population still feel that they are human beings that deserve more and more and more, off the back of those who struggle day to day? There is always some created and/or exaggerated excuse to charge the US population more.

I'm writing because the proposal the FCC will be considering Thursday does not go far enough to protect Net Neutrality from corporate interests. It could be easily modified or ignored by future FCC directors and that is an unacceptable risk to the free and open internet.

The only real way to ensure Net Neutrality in the future is to reclassify broadband as a utility. The FCC has the power to do this immediately, and it would permanently keep carriers like Verizon and AT&T from creating fast lanes for the 1%.

Net Neutrality is vitally important. We need the FCC to stand up Thursday and protect it: reclassify broadband as a utility now.

The modern economy would collapse without the internet and American life would be extraordinarily disrupted. It's a simple fact that the internet is a public utility, not a private service. It's time we regulated it as such.

Don't create a funnel for the internet toward wealthier companies. The advantages held by the richest businesses are stark enough. Stifling entrepreneurs kills innovation; it's un-American, unethical, and an absolutely dumb idea.

Why would we allow bigger, wealthier companies to have better access to the Internet? I don't think it's a far stretch to imagine a world where the higher costs of connectivity are passed down to users and smaller sites are pushed out of business because they can't keep up with sites that have more money.

Please reconsider your vote.

Hello,

I am writing concerning the proposed FCC rules concerning Net Neutrality. I would like to express my concern over creating a fast lane for internet traffic as I believe all internet traffic needs to be treated equally and not based on whether a content provider can or is willing to pay to be in the 'fast lane'.

The only solution I find acceptable is re-classification of Internet Service Providers as Title II Common Carriers.

Thank you for your time,

Allowing big telecom companies to control who should and shouldn't have access to the internet would be a step back in innovation and would stifle the shared creativity that currently exists and which could propel our civilization into a better future for everyone.

Doing this will actually slow the economy. You realize this right? You understand that busy-bee, blue collar guys use the internet, right? Opening up bandwidth to the rich, and restricting it to the poor, is just your ploy to make a new market; to pull money out thin air. No one has the right to restrict internet access in such a way. Keep the internet free and open.

I believe that net neutrality must be maintained in the United States because a failure to do so is a failure to protect the fundamental freedoms that our country is supposed to be based on. The Internet itself is becoming the primary means of creating, storing, and sharing information in the world, and allowing service providers to charge 3 times to allow a connection between 2 entities (both parties pay for a connection plus the content source also paying for the ability to utilize the connection they've already paid for) is akin to modern day book burning, where a completely irrelevant bystander can decide what information your average person can and cannot have access to. Our government is supposed to be 'for the people', not for the ever increasing profits of a few large corporations who can afford the most lobbyists to use back room dealings and quid pro quo to get our elected officials and other public representatives to do what they want instead of what the constituents want.

Having big business and corporations become the middleman between the public and the internet is an extremely bad idea. It would hurt small businesses and individuals, by keeping those attempting to find information from finding less mainstream options, and instead redirecting traffic to the highest bidder. This should not be the case. We cannot let money influence the internet in the same way we have allowed it to influence our politics. I implore you to defend Net Neutrality and keep the flow of information and knowledge open, instead of installing a constriction controlled by greed.

Thank you

The idea of taking the internet as we now know it and turning it into basically a pie chart where those with tons of money will be if it and the rest of us will be thrown back into the stone age of computers is not right especially in America. We all deserve the right to invent and share not just the big wigs just so they can make more money the middle class is who runs this economy you should learn this now.

No company should have the right to limit the rate at which we can access information or decide what information we can see at all. This is freedom of information and it is exactly this right that we are guaranteed by the Constitution. If we can be hampered or denied getting information, how are we different than any other fascist country?

The internet is a huge part of driving innovation, education, personal development and empowerment, and international goodwill. The diversity of sources and low barrier to entry are huge parts of what gives it its power and allow new ideas, smaller players, and innovative technologies to play on somewhat level ground with established organizations. Without this the diversity of knowledge will be severely lessened, economic innovation will be severely stunted, and quite frankly the most world-changing creation of our time (and many others) will be stripped of its greatest features.

Please think about the far-reaching implications of allowing money to directly dictate the display and dissemination of information.

To whom it may concern,

I am not sure what the motivation is behind the proposal but I do know this, telephone companies, internet providers and cable companies already virtually hold the rest of us hostage to their will. We do not need any proposal that moves us even further in that direction. Television used to be free and available. Students used to have equal ability/opportunity to do their homework. Communication was not tied to your power supply. We need to move toward a time of openness, not further away from it. We need to keep the internet open.

Sincerely,

To the members of the Federal Communications Commission:

Net neutrality is the bedrock of our free, fair, competitive, and open Internet. It should be preserved for the benefit of all, not scrapped to line the pockets of a few.

Allowing Internet service providers to purchase “fast lanes” would produce another cost to be passed along to consumers. It would also enshrine the power of incumbent content providers at the expense of startups and smaller companies ... the heroic backbones of Freedom and Democracy.

In the past, the FCC has agreed that Internet “fast lanes” like those currently under consideration would threaten net neutrality. This proposed rule change would likely result in higher consumer costs and decreased private sector innovation.

I strongly urge you to reject Internet “fast lanes” and preserve net neutrality.

Mr. Wheeler,
I am writing you to tell you that what Comcast is attempting to do will be incredibly detrimental to the internet and society at large. America has been built on innovation and the idea of freedom. Comcast may be "innovating" but they're doing it at the expense of our freedom. The internet is a space designed to be free of prejudice and bias, but this would give preference to websites themselves. I want to live in a world where the internet is available, because it is the new frontier for globalization. America is already falling behind and taking away our current internet would only slow us down. Please don't allow this to happen. Thank you,
Maggie Isaacson

Dear US Communications Regulator,

The internet is one of the few areas of society today where people of all creeds and abilities and classes can count on impartial access to information. I know that I have been able to use the internet as my primary tool for advocacy, using my voice - as I'm doing now - to help create the world that I want to live in. Other media is not like this, making it imperative that we keep the internet equally accessible to everyone. I want others to be able to use the internet as a tool for good, like I try to use it every day, and without the openness that the internet currently has this won't be possible.

The internet as it is now, allows people from all walks of life to access education and work. Take that away, then motivated good people will be left behind because they can't afford it. I see this as a power play because it certainly isn't a supportive initiative for the people.

The FCC nor any other organization or person has any right to try and turn the internet into what cable tv is now. It is our human right to have access to the internet, the ENTIRE internet, at the best possible speed, and EVERYONE should have the right to do so. Stop trying to control things even more. We all know that Comcast, AT&T, Verizon and Time Warner have the capability of creating more internet infrastructure, lower the already too high prices for internet packages and STILL be able to make trillions of dollars. Stop trying to pull the wool over everyone's eyes like you are doing us a favor. Stop siding with greedy corporations, respect the people you serve, for once.

Dear Sirs,

The Internet has changed the world we live in for the better. It has opened doors to education, world news and commercial opportunity for millions across the globe and continues to bring political democracy to many that were previously denied such basic rights.

All this has been achieved without corporate or political ownership or dominance. It should remain that way and not be allowed to fall prey to large corporate interests that would inevitably cause its proven benefits to become of secondary importance to their own corporate agendas.

Net neutrality principles are essential to a 21st century internet. The FCC should protect the open internet and further, treat it as a telecommunications service to disincentivize greedy ISPs from trying to extract additional fees from consumers and web content creators and limiting or blocking content from other websites.

I am a member of the global community of women at WorldPulse.com, a website founded by Jensine Larsen of Portland, OR. We are terribly concerned about the prospects of losing the neutrality of the internet, because the "little people" of the world, including the women we are trying to empower so they can tell their stories online, change their lives and those of their families and communities with education, online journalism and ecommerce, need it to effect change.

We call it digital empowerment, and the FCCs plan to implement the pay to play rule is 180 degrees in opposition to all we are trying to achieve on behalf of women everywhere. You simply would not believe what some of these women have to do just to access the internet, and if they and their messages are relegated to some kind of internet slow lane while big corporations hog the fast lane, it will be devastating to so many who are trying to effect positive change for their young women and future generations by using the internet. If it costs them any more to have internet access, many will fall back into anonymity, suffering and silenced in some backwater of a snail's pace "lane" of the internet with little hope of improving their situations.

Please, PLEASE don't let this happen! They are already dealing with so much, and the internet was created to be neutral...this essential founding principle is why it's such a blessing and an effective, life-changing tool for women and girls in remote places here in the US and around the world. An education, a voice, and a opportunity to make an income online when many of them have no other options - that's all they want. Will we make that any more difficult for them than it is already? Will we open the door for greedy corporations to charge them more to access the internet and publish online, then limit or block access to their websites? That would be so contrary to everything our country is supposed to be about, and just a horrible thing to subject our friends around the world to. Please DO NOT allow this to happen!

In addition, I earn my entire income, support 3 adults and empower dozens of small internet publishers through my work as a web designer. Times are still tough, and though I'm getting close to not needing it any more, we do receive assistance that helps us get the groceries we need every month. If the FCC implements this pay to play rule, it would severely set back my goal of 100% self-sufficiency, and seriously endanger my income and those of everyone I work for who have small businesses online.

People will not only suffer but will cost the country more money in assistance for those whose incomes are negatively impacted by the rule, and a world full of people trying to change their lives for the better via using the internet would have their hopes dashed as soon as they were lifted if you implement this proposal.

Please advocate for us little people! Corporations are getting everything they want and more these days, and we the small but real people of the world are forced to bridge the gap. Don't take away the one shred of hope we have to change our lives for the better. Don't let Net Neutrality go by the wayside! Abandon the pay to play proposal!!

Please protect real Net neutrality to ensure a thriving economy and democracy.

Net Neutrality is an absolute imperative with regards to the future of this country and the world. Submitting to industry pressure would be a move of craven lowness that would ensure a stratified, unequal future for every man, woman and child in the country, placing the keys to the internet in the hands of morally and ethically bankrupt corporations and allowing them to dictate what is accessible and for what cost. Since its earliest days, the internet has been a demonstration of the transformative power and flexibility of openness and egalitarianism. What began as a medium for communication has become an undeniably essential and integral cornerstone of life for the vast majority of the human population of this nation. Do not give our future and our children's future to the kinds of corporations that have proven, time and again, to have no thought of benefit or service for our country or our species and who exist only to further the aggregation and gross misuse of extreme power and wealth.

Do not sell our present and our future.

To whom it may concern:

I am writing on behalf of myself and the representatives of my company and businesses like ours to express our deep concerns regarding the current vote on "Internet Fast Lanes".

As the head of operations at a small business, the implied degradation of service for non-premium paying members threatens our ability to create, market and sustain a web product. It would also inhibit competition in the free market by allowing certain competitors the opportunity to forego better service in favor of "winning out" via bigger bribes to monopolistic data carriers in order to gain preference for their goods and services.

With only one choice of local Internet service, I am certain that a "slow lane" and "fast-lane" Internet system will not increase service, but will instead serve to blackmail business like ours into paying continually higher (and more unaffordable) rates to maintain the same level of service.

Dear Congress

The internet should be free and open. The fact it isn't a free utility to the public is a great disappointment. To allow more control by greedy corporations you'll create even more of an oligarchy in this country, and if you do, I hope it causes a revolution because most of what this country does is steal freedoms through pandering to large corporations.

Allowing this to pass you put another cap on the sharing of information and knowledge, which will hurt the human race as a whole. How about choosing what's best for all human beings instead of what's best for a few, maybe then we'd get somewhere.

The proposed changes will greatly affect the ability of free expression and the exchange of ideas. The power of the internet is that all voices and opinions have equal access.

If these changes take place it will be a black mark on the legacy of all those involved that should have been protecting the rights of the people.

You have a choice to support corporate greed or empowering a tool that promotes free thinking.

Please take a stand for keeping the internet neutral. It is essential to keeping up the challenge against the widening in the digital divide. Ultimately, the fewer people who have access to the internet (due to economic divides), means fewer people contributing to the ideas and lives of American society, as well as keeping us as a nation participating fully in the global society. Thank you.

It is sad how everything is about how much money corporate giants can take from the people. The internet belongs to everyone. No one group should have the ability to regulate things. That will only lead to corruption and a corporate take over of our freedoms as we know it. Keep the internet free from outside regulation. Let us choose if we want to see something or not.

No favoritism (bought and paid) for the few big entities that already wield so much power over our lives.

The internet is a public right, like the use of roadways, and should not be infringed upon. It was created to share information, not to restrict it. Combined with efforts to merge all telecommunications into one company, this would create an Orwellian society where only the wealthy have any access to information. This must be stopped. ISPs are COMMON CARRIERS.

Dear Messrs:

The discussion on Net Neutrality has moved away from what consumers actually want and need almost entirely into the political realm. What we need in our Internet infrastructure is not necessarily what some call a fast lane or a slow lane, but an efficient allocation of resources, so that all applications appear seamlessly to the end user. Absent convincing evidence of a market failure or demonstrable consumer harm, network management should remain a free-market contract negotiation of sorts, and not end up looking like government controlled phone service infrastructure or of broadcast/cable content regulation.

For the past decade, activists with a political agenda have pushed the increasingly outlandish conspiracy theory that in the absence of immediate and pervasive federal regulation broadband Internet will be destroyed by the companies supplying it. Unfortunately, the FCC appears to be bending to such pressure to rush through yet another iteration of complex, unnecessary and legally questionable net neutrality rule making. We therefore respectfully call on Congress to assert its authority concerning the FCC's role, and ask the FCC to await further action from Congress.

In Verizon the D.C. Circuit Court interpreted Section 706 of the 1996 Communications Act so as to give the agency authority to adopt new net neutrality rules, as long as these rules do not impose common carrier obligations on ISPs. The court's ruling may even provide the FCC with new powers to regulate Internet services beyond broadband infrastructure, such as "edge providers." The only real limit is that the FCC can't overtly treat Internet services as common carriers. But this limit may mean little.

Importantly, section 706 was not intended by Congress to constitute an independent grant of affirmative regulatory authority. This was the Commission's own understanding of Section 706 as well until the agency switched its view after its first foray into net neutrality regulation met with defeat in Comcast Corp. v. FCC.

Additionally, the court merely held the no-blocking and no-discrimination net neutrality rules unlawful; the court did not purport to define the boundaries of the Commission's Section 706 authority or adjudicate any particular exercises of such authority. The court did not require the agency to adopt any new regulations. Under all the circumstances – and especially the circumstance that there is no evidence of a present market failure or consumer harm resulting from Internet provider practices – there is no reason for the Commission to move forward at this time to adopt new net neutrality or net neutrality-like rules.

While some call for the FCC to use the “nuclear option” of Title II, we again urge Congress to clarify its intent with regards to the FCC's regulatory authority and for the FCC to wait for that direction from Congress.

The primary problem with Title II regulation of the competitive broadband industry is that it would abruptly decelerate the speed of Internet innovation to the speed of government – a regulatory regime that is as slow as the slowest part of the FCC's filing and public comment process.

Title II of the Communications Act is meant to deal with government-granted, government-regulated monopolies. The old bargain for what were once thought to be “natural monopolies” was that in order to encourage large, capital-intensive investments in utilities such as water, electric, or old-fashioned telephone infrastructure, government would grant a monopoly to a single provider who agreed to build very expensive infrastructure. Once built, these government-protected, government-regulated monopolies would be granted a guaranteed “rate of return” on their investments, but be forbidden from charging their customers monopoly prices.

The FCC definitively moved the Internet away from Title II regulations in 1998, when Clinton-appointed FCC Chairman William Kennard rejected the same Title II arguments being made today in that year's report to Congress:

“Classifying Internet access services as telecommunications services could have significant consequences for the global development of the Internet. We recognize the unique qualities of the Internet, and do not presume that legacy regulatory frameworks are appropriately applied to it.”

While the expansion of 706 authority would likely affect edge providers, Title II reclassification would likely apply to all aspects of transmission via Internet. Any business providing over-the-top services, including search, voice, video and email, would likely come under Title II regulation - a dramatic expansion of restrictive regulation. We do not believe the FCC's “forbearance” authority would be efficient for determining the applicability of provisions of Title II to all of these services. This uncertainty would embroil the industry and the FCC in a slew of legal battles, and volatile market uncertainty that would dramatically harm infrastructure investment and capital expenditures.

In consideration of the vibrant Internet market of both service providers and over-the-top services, we submit that no market failure or real harm to consumers has been adequately demonstrated to support any expansion of FCC authority over the Internet. We urge Congress to act expeditiously in expressing its understanding of the proper role of the FCC in regard to regulating the Internet, and urge the FCC to wait for Congressional direction.

Net neutrality principles are of the utmost importance and anything violating open internet principles is unacceptable. The FCC should use it's authority to regulate the internet as a telecommunications service to protect consumers and enshrine Net neutrality.

I am very concerned about any paid prioritization or proposed "pay-to-play" rule—destroying Net neutrality principles is not an option. This new rule will change the nature of the equal and open internet, while creating real barriers to entry that will stifle innovation.

I can't believe we are back again fighting for our right to ride on the internet highway in ways that we see fit. No company has the right to impede or speed up certain traffic. If I pay for a specific download/upload speed then I deserve to have the right to full speed access to any website I choose to visit. My ISP should not have the ability to determine what websites I receive in a timely manner.

Preserving Net Neutrality is as important as preserving rights of free speech for all citizens. It would be absolutely criminal to impede internet access or agility on the grounds of any corporate control; doing so would directly counter American spirit of individual freedom. Please vote to preserve and protect this basic right.

The internet will cease to exist as we know it if we allow ISPs the ability to purchase fast lanes. Since the internet became the prominent force that it is today, I have lived in metropolitan areas with standard internet speeds and I have lived in rural areas with slow internet speeds. So, I know first-hand how limiting and debilitating slow internet speeds can be.

Giving businesses the ability to purchase faster internet speeds for select content would essentially slow the internet for everyone else. This would be a dire mistake. It would stifle innovation and place undue power in the hands of corporations with especially deep pockets. Put simply, the internet is the remarkable space that it is because of its free and open nature. We cannot afford to undermine net neutrality in any way. Please don't kill the internet. Protect a free and open internet so that it can continue to evolve and serve us in new and unpredictable ways.

Thank you,

The internet should remain a level playing field where anyone can put out content, and no one should be able to use their corporate status to gain advantage with regards to faster and easier websites. With corporate control over our media and some of our politicians, the internet has been a safe haven for democracy for decades. Please keep it that way.

The 21st century internet is an integral part of our economy, democracy, and communication systems. America is absolutely dependent on an open internet operating on net neutrality principles.

As such, you have an obligation to regulate it as a utility. Please assert your Title II authority, and stop trying to appease the telecom giants at the expense of everyone else.

The proposal in front of the FCC would allow Comcast, AT&T and other big telecom companies to decide who can benefit from fast Internet speed -- while slowing down, or even blocking, everyone else -- and making millions in profit from it! That's just not right !!!! - If there is anything you should ever inspire to "slow down" or eliminate on the internet would be child pornography and other violent hate speech pornography ! That is something that has become out of control as it has become a billions of $ industry while the FCC just stands by and watches. Please, may the FCC go down in history actually "regulating" greedy and unethical practices hurting the fabric of our society instead of supporting the bottom line of money and power hungry corporations.

Net neutrality must be maintained to ensure the equal playing field of the Internet. If you do not maintain Net neutrality, then Internet Providers will be able to decide who can, and can't benefit from faster Internet speeds, and who will fail and be stuck with slow internet speeds, even being able to slow down, or block any sites they want to fail, while simultaneously making millions in profits.

If the freedom and openness of the Internet is to be maintained, if innovation is to continue, then Internet Providers need to be reclassified as Common Carriers, nothing less.

Here is a column that expresses my opinion about the need to preserve Net Neutrality and oppose a "fast lane" for those who can afford higher payment. Please insert into your comments:

<http://www.examiner.com/article/fcc-moves-to-overturn-net-neutrality-making-money-talks-truer-than-ever>

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler, a former telecom industry lobbyist, has proposed a new set of rules that will allow Internet service providers to charge web publishers extra for preferential treatment - giving them a fast lane on the Internet highway.

"Large websites like Fox News could pay for priority service to ride in the fast lane and reach more people online—while independent blogs like Daily Kos, nonprofits, small businesses and any website that can't afford it will be left out in the cold," says Paul Hogarth, Daily Kos.

The Internet is rapidly supplanting TV, radio and newspapers as the main source of news and information. More than half of Americans get their information from Internet sources, and the rate is even higher for young people.

Yet, the Internet is not regarded as a common carrier, with a vital role in the public interest as well as public ownership of air waves, as are broadcast and the telephone communications.

And increasingly, our access to information as well as programming that shapes our culture and values, is in the control of a handful of corporate conglomerates whose allegiance is to profit, not to public interest, and who use their power over media to impact the political landscape.

If this sounds like the continuing of a pattern in this country where income inequality is growing exponentially abetted by policies which establish that corporations are people, money is speech, and wealth and power are increasingly interlinked - you would be right.

One can conceive in the not too distant future when there are minimal services at the "basic" level, with everything else having to pay premium rates, and those who can't pay, not gaining access at all. Soon after, there could be blackouts as the ISPs (like the cable companies) shut down whole content providers for refusing to come up with higher premiums (recall how the Academy Awards were blacked out when a network refused to pay Cablevision's increased rates).

"Taken to an extreme, their actions could result in political bloggers, news outlets, and even organizations like Democracy For America being silenced because the powers that be don't like our message -- or because we can't pay their sky-high rates," writes Charles Chamberlain, Executive Director, Democracy for America, who notes that a key reason Vermont Governor Howard Dean was able to run a credible campaign for president was because of the internet. "Net Neutrality is about more than paying extra to stream your favorite show on Netflix. It's about preserving the last free, equal, and open forum in our democracy.

"We've already seen the wealthy try to take control of our democracy. Supreme Court decisions like Citizens United and McCutcheon have changed the rules of campaign finance, heavily favoring rich donors at the expense of people like you and me.

"The corporate attack on Net Neutrality is driven by the same billionaires, for the same reasons. The Internet has been crucial to building progressive power in America. Without it, we would have been defeated by corporate cash long ago. The billionaires want to control the Internet and tilt the playing field in their favor. They want the Internet to be like television, where only those who can afford to spend a lot of money are able to deliver their message.

"The Internet thrives as a medium for political discourse -- and as a way to level the playing field between the 1% and the 99% -- because it is free and open. It doesn't matter how much money you make or how many lobbyists you can hire. If you can come up with a good idea or a compelling message, it can spread online.

"It's this same openness that has made the Internet a medium for growth and job creation among 21st century industries, keeping thousands of Americans employed at the same time as many sectors of our economy are shedding jobs. That's why one of the most effective ways to go on offense against income inequality is to take action to save a free and open internet."

The rules overturning net neutrality has to be considered in context, which over time has resulted in the consolidation of media to a handful of self-serving entities with the power to control everything we know, see, believe.

This is thanks to a series of decisions going back to the Reagan era when the Fairness Doctrine was overturned and corporate consolidation was unleashed.

Before that, there was the recognition going back to Thomas Jefferson that a free and open media was vital to the preservation of democracy - after all, how can you have an educated citizenry if there is no way to get information in which to make voting decisions.

In 1969, The Supreme Court's ruling also affirmed the public interest in preventing monopolization of media: "It is the purpose of the First Amendment to preserve an uninhibited marketplace of ideas<http://www.examiner.com/uspolitics.about.com/od/electionissues/a/fcc_fairness.htm> in which truth will ultimately prevail, rather than to countenance monopolization of that market, whether it be by the government itself or a private licensee. It is the right of the public to receive suitable access to social, political, esthetic, moral and other ideas and experiences which is crucial here. That right may not constitutionally be abridged either by Congress or by the FCC."

Regardless, in 1987, the FCC repealed<<http://www.museum.tv/archives/etv/F/htmlF/federalcommu/federalcommu.htm>> the Fairness Doctrine, "with the exception of the personal attack and political editorializing rules."

The Supreme Court also reversed its 1969 decision in order to let the FCC's rule to stand. In a decision that echoes the rationale for overturning Voting rights Act, it wrote, "we no longer believe that the fairness doctrine<http://www.uspolitics.about.com/od/electionissues/a/fcc_fairness.htm>, as a matter of policy, serves the public interest."

This ruling is what made Rush Limbaugh and right-wing radio possible.

And this week, the Supreme Court which loves money in politics, is hearing a case that would basically make it perfectly okay to run a political campaign based on lies - it has already ruled that it is okay for news organizations to deliberately lie<<http://www.projectcensored.org/11-the-media-can-legally-lie>>.

Under the Bush Administration, the FCC (chaired by Michael Powell, son of Colin Powell) overturned rules prohibiting cross-ownership of a broadcast TV station and daily newspaper in the same market, enabling Rupert Murdoch to take over the New York City media market (New York Post, Fox TV, cable news, Wall Street Journal) - is it any wonder News Corp was so blatantly supportive of Bush and Fox has become a GOP propaganda tool?

The Bush FCC presided over one record media merger after another, having the temerity to argue that the Internet allowed unlimited access to other voices.

"In 1983, the American media was dominated by 50 companies," Sen. Bernie Sanders noted. "Today, media ownership is overwhelmingly concentrated in just six corporations: Comcast, Disney, Time Warner, News Corp., Viacom and CBS." These six control 90% <<http://owni.eu/2011/11/25/infographic-media-consolidation-the-illusion-of-choice>> of what we reach, watch and listen to.

Now, the FCC is also leaning to allow a merger between Comcast and Time Warner merger, creating an even bigger Biggest Media Conglomerate.

"The Comcast takeover of Time Warner would turn a third of American households into Comcast customers and create a virtual monopoly in 19 of the 20 largest media markets."

The net neutrality decision must be seen in light with the Supreme Court's decision overturning campaign finance limits opening the floodgates to unlimited spending by billionaires and corporations (as well as ruling that it is perfectly okay for campaign ads and news to knowingly lie).

Rupert Murdoch and News Corp were big supporters of George W Bush's election, an

FCC——

The 21st century internet is an integral part of our economy, democracy, and communication systems. America is absolutely dependent on an open internet operating on net neutrality principles.

As such, you have an obligation to regulate it as a utility. Please assert your Title II authority, and stop trying to appease the telecom giants at the expense of everyone else.

Thank you,

Controlling the internet is like trying to control freedom of speech. It's ridiculous.

If people have such a problem with it, then it should be up to the individual to control themselves, their children or whoever else they are responsible.

Not the government or some huge corporation.

Did they not learn anything from Clear Channel's attempt to monopolize radio? The state of today's Music and Radio industry is a direct result of this level of greed. Controlling what people see and hear is a recipe for another disaster, not to mention the fallout that will effect countless small businesses! Please consider all the careers you jeopardize with these changes, in comparison to adding to the already significant revenue streams of Comcast and Verizon. Please do the right thing. Thank you.

FCC members:

I don't usually send messages indirectly but this is a vital decision point on a very important issue.

Net neutrality enables organic growth of the world's information system. We should join the EU and other countries around the world in upholding this principle which has worked so well for years.

The Internet should have no favorites and should offer no special treatment to anyone, especially not for profit. By killing net neutrality you strain content providers and steal from the average Joe, while the big corporations laugh all the way to the bank. It is just wrong and you know it.

If it ain't broke, don't fix it. A corporate blitzkrieg against the working system of neutrality reeks of an agenda that should raise serious suspicion from a body whose intentions were to safeguard the American people's airwaves. Indeed, there will be no need for an FCC if you alter your core purpose and serve financial interests instead of the public.

I am 73 years old. I remember when advertisers were enough to support television coming into our homes without charge. Somehow the doctrine of "more" has changed that. Greed and quarterly profits have become the norm. The next attack of the rich and powerful is about to happen with the internet. Only you can preserve and protect the commons. I am sure that I am not alone in feeling that my government is participating in the dumbing down of its citizens and creating a new slave class. You must remember your job is to protect the many not just to enrich the few.

It is imperative that the internet stay an open source of communication and not be allowed to be divided up by corporate interests. The internet is an infrastructure in the same way that our roads are, and in the same way it must be allowed for individuals and businesses to travel freely on the byways of the internet.

The companies which are seeking the proposed change, to allow them to decide who gets what access to the internet, are already making plenty of money. There is not need to pander to their excessive greed at the expense of everybody else.

Big corporations should not have the power to create fast vs. slow "lanes" on the Internet, thus monopolizing their own avenues for information and commerce while creating a two-tiered system that only benefits them. The internet should be a free and open system that does not primarily benefit those with more money and power!

Subject: We can't treat the internet as a service anymore

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

The internet is a cornerstone of modern life -- from our day-to-day live to businesses and jobs. We simply can't live without it, so it's time to declare that it is a public utility, not a private "service."

Please build any net neutrality argument upon solid legal standing. Specifically, this means reclassifying broadband under Title II of the Telecommunications Act of 1934.

706 authority from the Telecommunications Act has been repeatedly struck down in court after legal challenges by telecom companies. Take the appropriate steps to prevent this from happening again.

To the Members of the FCC

As citizen and as Director the UCLA Education and Research Center I urge you to enforce strong net neutrality rules. Internet providers have enough profits to invest in infrastructure without the need to charge fees for better faster service that would threaten the distribution of accessible high quality educational material from local to global audiences. The European union and other countries have adopted strong net neutrality rules while already providing much faster access for every customer and at a much lower price than US companies charge for comparatively slow service. For the US to stay competitive it is necessary to build a better and cheaper internet service infrastructure thta is non-discriminatory to educational institutions, students, volunteers, small businesses and other creative users of the internet. Smart regulation demands reliable service for all at reasonable fees. Internet has become a utility and should be regulated as such with caps on profits and demands on creating a much needed service for all at reasonable prices.

Companies do not have the right to decide for customers their needs for service. If so, we the consumer, should have rights to order companies to fire people, reduce their rates or provide what service we dictate. Since we don't, no one else in any company has any power either to dictate or control what service we the consumer need or want. Such actions by these companies sends a loud and clear signal to the consumer that they don't care and don't need their business if they don't like the service. It also means that these companies must be broken up by law and reduced to provide more competitor room and competition.

Net Neutrality not only ensures a level playing field for competition, it ensures technological growth which is how the Internet got to where it is today from a fledgling DARPA project. Doing away with Net Neutrality would stifle this and only yield ridiculous profit for corporations. Isn't it a sad state of affairs that the country which gave birth to the Internet now has the highest prices and slowest speeds? Other countries enjoy fast, free, citywide Internet and meanwhile here in the States we're debating on how best to maximize corporate profit. This is out of control but there's still time to stop this nonsense. Please support Net Neutrality.

Please don't allow Comcast, AT&T and other big telecom companies to decide who can benefit from fast Internet speed -- while slowing down, or even blocking, everyone else -- and making millions in profit from it! The internet SHOULD be a public utility - not a big business profit farm.

The internet should remain "free and open" so that it is an equal playing field for all participants. Wifi has made the internet an open source operable through the airwaves and only God truly has dominion over the air. Give to Caesar what is his and give to God what is his.

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners—

To the FCC—

Please build any net neutrality argument upon solid legal standing. Specifically, this means reclassifying broadband under Title II of the Telecommunications Act of 1934.

706 authority from the Telecommunications Act has been repeatedly struck down in court after legal challenges by telecom companies. Take the appropriate steps to prevent this from happening again.

The internet is designed as and works for us as a telecommunications service.
We understand there is extreme income inequality these days. And that those with the money feel it their privilege to reshape the world to their liking.
However, we-the-people look at it differently. Although we are used to living without material goods, we demand fairness in access to the information highway.

The internet is an idea forum open to all as well as a home for information, entertainment and marketing. Allowing a handful of large companies to control how accessible different sites and services are would handicap the internet as an idea forum and discriminate against individuals and small companies who don't have the funds pay for a "fast lane." Please preserve net neutrality instead of granting the telecommunications industry a new revenue stream based on their ability to charge for access and handicap the ability of smaller players to communicate.

Please do not allow business interests to control the content of what is available on the Internet. Dear Mr. Wheeler,

Please support Net Neutrality! The Internet should be a democratic space, free and open to everyone equally. When Avaaz and partner organisations brought their million signatures outside your office, you were quick to support an open Internet. We cannot stand idly by and watch you cave now to pressure from private companies who would profit from this proposal. Show that you can stand by your word, and support the democratic Internet we have now. Oppose any legislation that would allow private companies to profit from, or have better access to, the Internet.

Brazil and the EU have already passed legislation supporting Net Neutrality. The US should be at the forefront of the movement to support an open Internet. You and the FCC must not only oppose this dangerous proposal, but pass legislation for Net Neutrality to support and protect a free and open Internet for all, now and for the future. Thank you for your time and consideration on this very important issue.

Dear FCC,

I am writing to oppose rules that will allow for discrimination on the Internet - where the wealthy can purchase faster Internet service and everyone else continues to have slower service.

I do not want telecom giants and wealthy Internet companies to determine the future of the Internet. I want new ideas to flourish on the Internet and not be blocked because they do not have sufficient funds to purchase fast service and compete.

I do not want the Internet to be turned into another vehicle that allows money to flow from working Americans to the wealthiest -- where web-based services like Netflix purchase faster service and pass the costs on to consumers.

The proposal being considered would kill rather than protect Net Neutrality and allow rampant discrimination online. The Internet should be viewed as a public good and should be operated consistent with our rights to Freedom of Speech and Freedom of the Press. Turning the Internet into a pay to play scheme is unacceptable.

The only one who benefit from a lack of net neutrality are the companies buying politicians and their political appointees and lackeys.

Please consider yourself firmly in the Spineless lackey camp by being unwilling to stand up to the Verizons of the world.

Your legacy will most likely be an era that crushes innovation by individuals. I hope that makes you proud in your old age.

Yes my criticism is highly personal – because YOU are the one who is unwilling to stand up and do what you know is right. You have FAILED to do what I think you know is right.

If it really is a lack of legislation, get your backside up to the hill and make it happen. You have a position that you can use to make the difference in spite of the pressure of Verizons and Concasts.

I am a former GTE employee and believe that investment should be rewarded AND there are a limited number of providers so there needs to be a balance between providers and the public interest. That is not happening in the proposed regulations.

Subject: Reclassify Broadband as a Utility - Retain Net Neutrality
Dear FCC Chairman Wheeler:

I urge you to drop your proposed rules that would destroy net neutrality and essentially break the internet.

Your proposed path would lead to widespread discrimination online, once again giving the wealthy “1%” the upper hand, relegating the rest of us to the slow lane and diminished service. The internet is not a luxury — it is an economic necessity and we all deserve equal access that is affordable.

Under your proposed rules, the Comcasts of the world would be given even greater power over my online access and pocketbook, as if they don’t have enough already!

So, again, I urge you scrap your proposed rules — and I ask that you restore online nondiscrimination policies by reclassifying broadband as a utility.

I use the Internet to work from home and it's essentially a public utility for me to be able to do my job. If you create a tiered system for providers to give better service to bigger richer companies you have just eliminated why the Internet has been so useful to so many startups and businesses. Please do not do let this happen.

This will affect the way smaller businesses can compete with large companies and will start to eliminate many startups from being able to provide services on the Internet that can compete with larger companies giving them an unfair advantage and stifling innovation and entrepreneurs. I can't think of a better way currently to eliminate competition in the web portal space than by allowing this to happen.

Please, please get involved and regulate this unbelievably useful technology so that we all can have a level playing field. It seems like this is the time to make sure that we create an infrastructure for everyone to compete fairly and not have private companies dictate winners and losers but allow businesses to compete on their applications.

Thank you for your time.

Furthermore, it will seriously impact our small American manufacturing business. We manufacture high tech parts inspection systems that have been sold all over the world. The only way a very small business can compete is to have their site be seen on the internet. We have been in business since 1984.....but we could not pay any more for our web presence than we do now.

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

The internet is central to American life and the modern economy. It makes no sense to regulate it as a private "service." It is a public utility and should be treated as such.

Please build any net neutrality argument upon solid legal standing. Specifically, this means reclassifying broadband under Title II of the Telecommunications Act of 1934.

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

I ask that you protect Net neutrality by urging the FCC to scrap the proposed “pay-to-play” rule.

This rule does more than promote the corporatization of internet access--it relegates independent sites to an inferior internet on the ‘slow lane’ and creates a HUGE barrier to entry for new start ups that may compete with--or directly challenge--incumbent technologies and corporations. This rule will KILL start-up innovation and enshrine the power of Big Telecom, who will make the internet as awful as cable television.

Please protect Net neutrality to preserve an open internet and urge the FCC to assert reclassification authority of broadband under title II.

I cannot come to demonstration in New York but I very, very opposed to the proposal for letting Verizon ,Comcast or any of the major communications companies decide-who and how(charging fees) for internet usage. Internet lines communication should be the same for all people regardless of income. This is the way of communication and should not have a price for usage. There are programs now created for low income people to have cell phones; same speed internet should have same consideration. I am retired with a limited budget but still must interact with the people, life situation around me. The cost of just watching television is expensive enough so please keep internet lines speed equal for all people. Thank you for giving consideration, giving consideration to my opinion. Toni Abrams

I am opposed to the announced “fast line” rules, as it will lead to double-charging of consumers. For example, services like Netflix will need to pay extra to get on a “fast-lane” to serve their products. Not only will they have to pay an entity like Comcast, but then I am still required to pay an ever-increasing fee to Comcast to connect to Netflix. Additionally, with announced data caps, an artificial “scarcity” now exists with data usage. This will continue to drive up prices for end-net products and stymy competition.

Stop “fast lanes,” disallow “data caps,” and reclassify the internet as a common carrier. It is the only way to ensure the internet remains open.

I was deeply disappointed to hear that the Federal Communications Commission is planning on implementing rule changes that would allow Internet service providers to pay for special, faster lanes to deliver their content. In an environment where large corporations can pay for faster service, start-ups and every day Internet users won't be able to compete and we will lose the open, free-flowing exchange of information that has made the Internet so dynamic and integral to our lives.

The FCC can ensure it has the tools to act by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service. I urge you to reject the new rules and to take this vital and common sense step toward protecting net neutrality.

Subject: In support of a neutral Internet for data science.

Dear Chairman Wheeler and FCC Staff,

I am writing today to express my strong support for real Net Neutrality regulations, and against the possibility of an Internet “fast lane”.

I am a researcher who applies data to the study of crises and conflicts. My work, which has directly supported both the intelligence community and humanitarian organizations, would not be possible without the ability to move vast amounts of data rapidly across the Internet.

This data often originates from academic institutions, private foundations, local volunteers, and others who are less likely to be compete with large businesses for “fast lane” access. Furthermore, data is often collected from a wide range of online sources, processed via cloud computing, and disseminated to researchers and consumers. Each step of the process is likely to be slowed down on a non-neutral Internet, potentially making some data streams unusable altogether.

Data science, and so-called Big Data, have seen some of the most exciting innovations of recent years in business, academia, public health, and more. The most critical components in many data science effort are the data scientists themselves, who are often recruited from the ranks of academics, researchers, or even talented self-taught amateurs. Without access to data, or ability to share innovative new data sets and sources, this pipeline of human capital will be placed at risk, ultimately threatening the United States's advantage in innovation and innovators.

The Internet service providers have a history of short-term planning, zero-sum thinking in their competition with one another, and a narrow focus on entertainment content. Many content providers such as Netflix also focus on 'data' in the form of movies, music and games. It is the FCC's duty to look to the country's long-term interests. Data -- even at the scale which will be adversely affected by the proposed "fast lanes" -- is not just entertainment. It is tweets which can predict the next flu outbreak; it is event reports which can predict the outbreak of a civil war; it is a hundred separate streams which talented and hard-working American researchers are combining, analyzing, sharing, and using to discover something new about the world. If this source of innovation is slowed or shut off to make room for another television show, our country will be all the worse off for it.

I respectfully urge the FCC not to move forward with an Internet fast lane, and to fight to protect an open, neutral and innovative Internet in the United States.

Sincerely,
David Masad

Subject: Net Neutrality and broadband competition

We are a small company that designs software for the manufacturing industry. We depend on broadband to "dial in" and monitor and assist customers with problems on their manufacturing facilities. The US broadband policies are really bad, we have one service provider Comcast with essentially no competition, our rates and speeds have more or less remained almost the same for around 10 years. It is almost impossible for us to develop newer products or for our customers to allow greater access thus reducing their costs and improving the chances of them manufacturing additional products in the US without greater bandwidth. The internet is the modern electronic equivalent of the road in front of our building. Unfortunately it is narrow and expensive to use. Net neutrality violations will only make the situation worse by creating additional bottlenecks.

The FCC should be ashamed of itself for allowing Internet Service providers to strangle the future of the United States. You are supposed to be a regulatory agency please do your job and classify these companies as common carriers.

Subject: Let's stop pretending that the internet is a "service"

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

The internet is a public utility. We can't live without it and the economy certainly can't function without it. It's time to stop this "fast lanes" and "slow lanes" discussion and move to regulate the internet as a public utility.

The loss of a free internet represents nothing more than a grab for more money. There is nothing in the public interest here; the only beneficiaries are the ISPs who will charge more and more for less content, or the content which they are sponsoring. This will lead to higher advertising revenues for the sponsored content because advertisers will request feeds with higher bandwidth.

When cable TV was initially offered to the consumer, it was under the premise that paying for content removed the need for commercials. Now, there is nothing that differentiates cable TV from the older, "free" TV that my parents watched. Cable has become nothing more than a means for faster distribution of advertising content.

Introducing a means by which cable companies can steer people to their own sponsored channels/programs simply furthers the cause of advertising over content. More and more, people are turning to streaming videos due to the volume of advertising. Shared video sites like 4chan where bootleg videos are available are becoming more popular due to the removal of advertising.

Many people now use add-ons like Adblock because commercials have become more and more intrusive. Commercials are played at high volume, making conversation impossible because the advertiser does not WANT people to talk; they want attention to their advertising.

In sum: net neutrality is essential to the people of the United States. Using the internet for transmission of data, whether it is video, audio or text should be at the discretion of the user, not big business whose goals are detrimental to the consumer.

The internet is a public utility. We can't live without it and the economy certainly can't function without it. It's time to stop this "fast lanes" and "slow lanes" discussion and move to regulate the internet as a public utility.

To Whom It May Concern:

I would like to add my thoughts to those of others who feel that the internet must remain open and have equal access to remain and to develop even more as a tool that serves the common good. Making internet speed and access a matter of the highest bidder makes it become a tool for the bidders good and destroys the potential the internet can continue to have. I would ask the FCC to reclassify internet providers as Title Two Common Carriers. We have seen too many things that should be in the public interest go to the monied interests, and the internet should not be the next victim.

Thank you for your time.

Subject: what ?
You say one Internet.
Then you vote for fast lane.
Next you tell me that now I will understand.

Whats next ? Water on demand ? Electricity on demand ?

I already pay for the service, get taxed and now the FCC wants me to pay more.
And by the way the service is not good at all .

Allowing internet service providers to create internet “fast lanes” and “slow lanes” would do nothing more than allow them to extort payments from companies like Netflix. It’s time to admit that the internet is a public utility, not a private “service.”

The modern economy would collapse without the internet and American life would be extraordinarily disrupted. It’s a simple fact that the internet is a public utility, not a private service. It’s time we regulated it as such.

Please build any net neutrality argument upon solid legal standing. Specifically, this means reclassifying broadband under Title II of the Telecommunications Act of 1934.

706 authority from the Telecommunications Act has been repeatedly struck down in court after legal challenges by telecom companies. Take the appropriate steps to prevent this from happening again.

FCC——

The 21st century internet is an integral part of our economy, democracy, and communication systems. America is absolutely dependent on an open internet operating on net neutrality principles.

As such, you have an obligation to regulate it as a utility. Please assert your Title II authority, and stop trying to appease the telecom giants at the expense of everyone else. The U.N. agrees.

Subject: Reclassify the Internet as a common carrier

To: The Commissioners of the FCC

Your proposed path would open the door to widespread discrimination online. It would give Internet service providers the green light to implement pay-for-priority schemes that would be a disaster for startups, nonprofits and everyday Internet users who cannot afford these unnecessary tolls.

I urge you to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.

Subject: Reclassify
Hello,

I'm writing as a concerned citizen, urging you to reclassify ISPs as common carriers.

I find it laughable that you believe corporations wouldn't immediately abuse their power to charge other companies for access.

Verizon already abuses their position by USING TITLE II FUNDS TO BUILD THEIR OWN INFRASTRUCTURE and then claim that the resulting network is not subject to Title II.

<http://www.theverge.com/2014/5/14/5716802/game-of-phones-how-verizon-is-playing-the-fcc-and-its-customers>

While that is technically not illegal in itself, it is not in the spirit of the law. It is ridiculous that the internet has not already been classified as a telecommunications system or utility. That's exactly what it is. Americans rely on it.

Just think about paying bills, doing banking, looking for a job. These things are basically impossible now without reasonable access to the internet. And if this proposal goes through as it is, it will be a disservice to the american people.

To Whom it May Concern,

As a college student examining my future, it is important that I can count on the internet to be a space where I can share ideas, build a business, and continue to learn without worrying about the extra cost of putting my site in the "fast lane". Net neutrality is also important to me because equal access to all voices via the internet allows me to learn from different viewpoints and grow as an educated member of society.

I know there is a lot of pressure from ISPs who want to implement the new proposal. However, I also know that you got into politics because you genuinely care about the future of our country. Maybe the internet isn't important to you, but it is extraordinarily important to many Americans, especially younger generations. There is no other space that allows so many people from different backgrounds to communicate as freely and openly. This new proposal threatens the vital diversity of voices that has so far enriched the lives of billions.

The free and neutral internet is a resource that must be protected. Rejecting the "Fast-Lane" proposal is the right thing to do for this country and for the world.

Historically, our stable social fabric is more fragile than is realized by tyrannical power-brokers until it is too late, & the infrastructure upon which all depend is lost in chaos for generations.

Net neutrality is extremely important for keeping the internet fair and accessible to all. Big companies shouldn't be in charge of who gets access or how fast that access is.

This bill will take a giant step in the wrong direction by giving the power to a select few to control the spread of information and goods over the internet. It puts companies and individuals on unequal playing fields based on who has more money to throw at comcast and AT&T.

Subject: Please Support Net Neutrality
Hello,

My name is Tyler Smith and
I am an attorney in Brooklyn New york.

I am writing to express my concern with the collapse of Net Neutrality rules/norms regarding Internet Service Providers. The free, open, and equal treatment of web content is essential to preserving the marketplace of ideas and culture the world wide web provides.

This issue has often been incorrectly reported as a chance for ISPs to charge for faster service, which is already the case. They will also choose to discriminate based on content when deciding how they deliver the web to their customers. That cannot be allowed to happen. Please act to the greatest degree possible to prevent this sort of content discrimination.

Classifying ISPs as Common Carriers has been supported by many Open Internet advocates. I do not know this area of law well enough to know exactly how that might affect regulation. As the experts in this field, please take whatever steps are necessary and in your power to prevent the cable and internet companies from rationing communication and altering service based on content.

Sincerely,
Tyler Smith

Please, please do not kowtow to the moneyed interests that would stifle freedom of speech and communication for the sake of the almighty dollar. Don't be the tools of those who would watch the world suffer in the dungeon of dictatorship as long as they can control the keys to the passageways.

This is an outrage! Obama promised net neutrality. What is his or any other political promise worth? This should not be allowed and destroys the usefulness of the 'NET'. Don't let corporations continue to run amuck and destroy this wonderful means of open communication and knowledge sharing!

The internet should be for everyone, not just the rich.

Power corrupts, do we really want to put that much power into these companies hands? I don't think so and I don't think that they would operate in the best interest of everyone. In fact, they can't, they have to serve their bottom line and their shareholder interest and that would be at the general public's expense.

I don't think that the rich should benefit at the expense of the poor and middle class on yet another level. Please, keep the internet for everyone!

I think it is critical to support Net Neutrality. Big companies seem to do quite well in staying alive. I'm finding it hard to believe it's even being considered to set up unequal access to high speed internet. It flies in the face of what's happening in other parts of the world. As a middle class citizen it seems as though individual rights are bringing subsumed by corporations to the detriment of our country. It's time to stop this trend.

keep the internet free and open. allow us all equal opportunity, and stop handing our country over to huge corporate interests.

The growth and creativity of the Internet has grown from the fact that all comers have an equal playing field. Which is exactly what would be destroyed by your 'fast lane' proposals.

The Internet no longer belongs to the US or the companies who laid the cable. They have long since earned back their investment.

Internet service must now be reclassified as a telecommunications utility and the wires must be opened up at a fair price to all comers. Any proposal short of this will be seen for what it is, an attempt to placate the public until a later date when net neutrality can be 'walked back' in the dark of night.

Ain't happening, folks. Do the right thing now, once and forever. Otherwise you will drive all of us underground and turn this into the biggest black market of all time.

Surprise me and declare that there's something in this world that's not for sale.

The internet is like a global library for every country and nation. We've used it for years and it has become such a great tool for communication, learning, marketing, and more. I support Net Neutrality. Everyone needs it from the poorest person to the richest.

Who gave you the right to decide whether to cap it or give it to a select group of people? Why must the wealthy benefit from everything in this world while the rest are treated as if we're indentured servants? The internet is for everyone, no one has the right to take it away.

The world just doesn't revolve around money. Friendship, compassion, collaboration, and sharing made many things possible and they still do.

What is wrong with you that you might even consider allowing net neutrality to die? A free and open internet is one of the only things that equalizes in this day and age. It's clear that corporations like Verizon and AT&T want to destroy that. Prove to the people that you're not completely in the pocket of corporations by protecting a free and open internet. If you, the FCC, doesn't do this then we'll know who our culprit is...

"Pay to Play" Fast lanes and slow lanes will just hasten the degradation of American Ideals of fairness. Free Enterprise capitalism is a wonderful thing, but the Corporate version has no humanity. We have truly entered another "Robber Baron" era and it must be halted in many avenues- this being a primary one.

Net Neutrality has been the major reason that the internet has been the nation's biggest and best democratic platform.

We would lose so much if the large telecoms could control internet speed or even block access. We must not allow that to happen.

Be wise and keep this form of communication available for everyone, not just a chosen few so these companies will make even more money!

I support Net Neutrality. Please do not allow telecom companies decide who can benefit from fast internet speed. Internet providers are now few as it is and their pricing structure is NOT in favor of the consumer. Let our Internet stay free and open. NOT pay more to play.

The internet shows the richness and creativity of a medium which is freely and equally open to all. It has become a symbol of freedom and the benefits of freedom. If we sell privilege on the internet we will demean that symbol and give influence over a common good to an influential few. It reduces competition, and controls the flow of information. It risks choking the chaotic democratic rush that the internet brings, a loss to all of us.

Clarity is all that is asked of us all.
Please, live and let live, in as much freedom of expression (which truly counts and does not harm) as is possible.

Please help to protect the little that is left to protect, in terms of neutrality. It is a question of priceless clarity. Net neutrality. All for one, one for all, with totally clear reciprocity. Clarity at the foundation is what is essential for the fruits which shall be reaped. We need all to plant as well as possible, with no neglect. For all our lives, all our children. What goes around does come around. Think it through.

Dont take away our freedom to choose!! Dont let one company decide the fate of such a vast and widely used tool. The internet may not be perfect but it should continue to remain open and free to all walks of life not to just a few. This would be like taking us back to when books were only for people of status and the rest of the world had no access to knowledge. Dont block the average person, get rid of companies that use algorithms to block people from getting any kind of information or track peoples purchases and spam them with offers too.

Dear Federal Communications Commission,

Please consider the Internet from an engineer's perspective. It is a fundamental piece of technological infrastructure. Leaving its future up to the monopolistic practices of a handful of corporations, even in part, would be irresponsible and horribly damaging to our country's future. A fast Internet, fully available to every citizen, is necessary for the US to stay strong and competitive. We need real net neutrality, not some watered down version of it. Please do the right thing.

Subject: Save Net Neutrality!

As an average American Irish journalist, I love using the internet. Who doesn't? I need it to be fluid and fast for my research and writing, among other things. But this isn't about affecting the individual and what sacrifices could be made in order to get more money and implement other designs. This is about honoring your fellow man and their hard work and their freedom. People who do not have TV and people who do. People who have money and people who are dirt poor because of the situation they are in. Not their hard work. They do not have equal opportunities, and I am wary of the bad decision to add to our adversities with segregation of something that's always been free. The internet connects us and supplies us with the feeling that we have this freedom in a society that filters and manipulates many resources. Please consider the consumer and the individual and how they are connected to you and affect you.

Best,

The US communications regulator will decide whether to move forward with a proposal that could kill the Internet as we know it. The proposal in front of the FCC would allow Comcast, AT&T and other big telecom companies to decide who can benefit from fast Internet speed -- while slowing down, or even blocking, everyone else -- and making millions in profit from it!

Major tech companies, investors and members of Congress are now actively opposed to this dangerous proposal! I urgently and respectfully request FCC members to keep our Internet free and open so that EVERYONE can benefit from the valuable service it offers regardless of age, financial status, geographical location, technology ability, etc..

Allowing internet service providers to create internet “fast lanes” and “slow lanes” would do nothing more than allow them to extort payments from companies like Netflix. It’s time to admit that the internet is a public utility, not a private “service.”

The U.S. has historically always supported neutral access to the Internet, since the actual cost to provide peering arrangements among Internet Service Providers is minimal, and traffic is normally symmetric between providers. Allowing providers to throttle traffic that has been paid for by their subscribers depending on what content provider is sending the data would be very bad for the American public, who should be the beneficiaries of U.S. Government policies. Please enforce neutrality among Internet providers.

The internet is for everyone. Technology is advancing in such a way (remember the results from backlash against Napster?) that if large corporations make decisions that solely influence themselves and neglect the people they serve, other options/companies/technologies will challenge and thwart efforts by the larger companies and make use of them... obsolete. The old ways of doing business are done.

Dear Chairman Wheeler,

I was saddened to see that the FCC voted 3-2 to approve the creation of an "internet fast lane." Having read multiple articles on the subject I'm curious as to how this is going to make the lives of everyday consumers better. I can see how internet service providers and established companies like Netflix will benefit from these changes.

As a Comcast and Netflix customer, I'm under the impression that my internet speed will be getting slower unless I want to pay Comcast for a faster speed. I will no doubt be paying Netflix a higher fee as they will pass the extra expenses for them to have a "faster internet" down the line to the consumer.

Chairman Tom Wheeler

Dear Chairman Wheeler,

As an Illinois consumer who depends on a fast, affordable web connection, I am concerned that a free and open Internet is now in grave danger.

We are troubled by reports that the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) plans to propose new rules that would open the door for big Internet providers to offer a "fast lane" to the highest bidders. Such a proposal would water down consumer protections, serve as a slippery slope to discrimination against certain web traffic, and force consumers like me to suffer higher rates and slower speeds.

That violates the spirit of "net neutrality."

Please, stand up for consumers, protect net neutrality, and fight for the free and open Internet.

Dear Members of the FCC,

I urge you strongly to keep the Internet free and open.
Don't allow these companies that are already as wealthy as they can possibly be to take even more from the American People and also thereby limiting their opportunities with the Internet.
Ps: People already pay for highspeed internet with warner cable!

Net neutrality is the right thing to do! Corporate control of the Internet means citizens of every country lose the very thing the Internet was created for -- free and flowing communication. If you care at all about democratic principles and human freedom, the Internet must be preserved as a free zone with maximal access.

We are at your service because people allow it. I will save my computer and trash the government posing to help me. You will pay the universal price for even attempting to strong arm the good people of the U.S. Stop attempting to take away from us, this is not what you've been appointed to do.

We need the internet to stay open and demand that the FCC steer clear away from the idea of partnering with major corporations in hopes of material advantages. The world as we know it needs to get back to its intended state where decisions are not made to fill one`s pocket but to be able to create a community that can represent the good together. With this tool we have no distance limitations, information flow is instant, let`s keep it that way!!!

The government needs to keep out of regulating the internet. Regulations may be necessary for things like public safety but the internet poses not threat to anyone and does not need to be regulated. Government attempts to regulate the internet are just attempts to cheat the American public through increased taxation.

I beg, that the final decision makers can understand how wrong it is to take away these free rights from us American's. The internet was not created to be controlled by Telecom companies to capitalize off of its free world wide information platform. It is simply unjust to attempt to control the usage rights of all people when the internet is a system built upon open policy, which every human deserves to have free access to. This should not be conditional to having a large corporation that benefits from its shared information, or being among the wealthy to support an increase in rising costs to support this insane initiative. As American's, we have rights, and if you move forward with this plot to kill net neutrality, you are literally taking away the rights to millions of innocent American's. please banish this law. As people, and as a nation we deserve equality.

Hello,

It seems it's that time again, someone(s) want to get gain over others, at the expense of all others.

Okay that's cool, only that we know about it and we are not actually okay with it. Yes it's such a rush to fuck others over, but no, no thank you. Especially as I find myself potentially in the latter category I say NO.

I ask that you the receiver of this letter, make our combined will known. We the mass users, have decided that keeping the internet free is a good thing, giving the control over to a few greedy individuals is bad.

We/I and probably you, want to let the internet be as it is. For what the greedily aroused people want, is your and ours, convenience-y and money. They must not be given into, this must be stopped now.

Good day

Mr Wheeler,

I'm writing you about the proposed "open internet" regulation. As a consumer I'm highly concerned that these rules will allow internet service providers, who already give consumers sub par service, to further degrade our service. I'm concerned that the internet service providers wish to make the internet more like cable and less the open communications platform it is today.

Please classify broadband providers as title II common carriers it's the only fair way for us to move forward.

Subject: Net Neutrality
Hello,

I am Eric Harper, a graduate student at the University of Michigan, and a U.S. citizen (been one since I was born in Dayton, OH).

I am writing to tell you how absolutely disappointed I am in what you (the FCC, not necessarily the person reading this email) are doing to the internet. You are caving into lobbyists and corporate cronies and selling us, the American people, for a quick buck. How dare you! This is the greatest country on the planet, and you are supposed to be protecting the freedom of the people. By allowing Internet Service Providers (ISPs) to put in fast lanes, you are selling us out, and preventing millions of Americans from enjoying all of the benefits that a free and open internet provide.

As a graduate student I use the internet everyday. By selling out to ISPs you are allowing corporations to make money while hampering my education, as well as the education of millions of Americans.

I would like to request that you reconsider your positions on this issue, and make all ISPs common carriers. No one should be able to pay to reduce the quality of service of another individual.

Thank you for your consideration

Net Neutrality should be treated more as a public utility so it'd be open to all internet users, not to be used as some sort of private sector for giant corporations who have little regard for those that cannot pay the higher fees.

Subject: Save Net Neutrality!

There is only so much pie. In order to increase the size of the piece of pie for one member, all others must (in a zero sum game) give up some of their share. In fact, only an undereducated, propaganda swallowing sheeple would think only Netflix would get more speed, without slowing down those who do not pay.

I bet the administration would love to throttle down the traffic of a website like www.drudgereport.com. Matt Drudge having paid his 'Patriot Tax', most likely would refuse to pay extra for services ALREADY RENDERED. By gaming the market and allowing large corporations to crowd out the little guy...why, we've already allowed that to happen in Congress, its time to stop it from happening to the world via the 'net.

Some big corporations want to be able to set up a "fast lane" for their big streaming plans and to do that, they propose to throttle other internet traffic.

That really means block or make slow enough to be useless. Unless the slow users step up and pay the corporate highwaymen fees to be in the fast lane.

This is outrageous and wrong! Don't do it!

'Afternoon Mr. Chairman, I recently heard the news about you ludicrously asinine plans to defunct internet neutrality. As a proud young American citizen, I say promptly to you "What the shit are you thinking!" Do you not have children/grandchildren of your own? Do you really want to be associated in the future with immense aggravation frustration?? Do what YOU think is right, not what the company is telling you to do. Take one for the team, be an American and save future generations from having to go through this monumentally gargantuan pile of FDA-approved, grade-A, 100% organic bullshit.

I have always believed that we should not follow others actions just because others did. But damnit we need the exact opposite of what you propose. We need Net Neutrality to be the law.

The internet should be equally available to all citizens. Allowing the blocking or slowing down internet access and internet speed to the average citizen, as being proposed to the FCC, is a form class warfare in my opinion. It would be like not allowing US citizens to enjoy the economic benefit of buying a car that gets 300 mpg if this were available. Oh, we already did that with Germany's VW. --

The internet is, and will remain the largest and most efficient communication route for the majority of inhabitant on this planet. The empowerment of each individual with this communication route is without doubt the largest step forward that mankind has taken in my lifetime. Ensuring that the communication route remains exactly equal will thereby ensure that all people have equal voice and power within this communication system.

Allowing any speed or efficiency advantage for the largest bidders will give the large, wealthy, and advantaged, most of which are amoral corporate machines, power over communication that will unbalance the great equalizing qualities of the present internet network. Please think about the bigger picture and our future.

Subject: Real net neutrality requires reclassification

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

To the FCC——

Please build any net neutrality argument upon solid legal standing. Specifically, this means reclassifying broadband under Title II of the Telecommunications Act of 1934.

706 authority from the Telecommunications Act has been repeatedly struck down in court after legal challenges by telecom companies. Take the appropriate steps to prevent this from happening again.

Sincerely,

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

Title II of the Communications Act of 1934 already grants you the authority to declare the internet a public utility and provide greater regulation to the telecommunications industry. It's long past time to declare the internet a utility.

Subject: In Opposition to the "Fast Lanes" Proposal
To the FCC,

I am 100% in opposition to the "Fast Lanes" proposal Tom Wheeler is expected to reveal in the coming days. It will completely eliminate the neutrality of internet access in the future. Setting aside for the moment the fact that such a rule will allow massive corporations to buy their way into our computers at a faster speed than those without the necessary capital, I think it is important to highlight how detrimental this will be for the lower income individuals in the United States. Those massive companies could (and almost certainly will) force consumers to pay extra for content that comes via the faster route, and relegating those that won't or can't pay to a much slower connection with fewer features.

Consider what that will do on such websites as Wikipedia, Merriam-Webster, and other knowledge repositories that have become integral to the US education process. If Wikipedia has two versions of their site, one for the "fast lane" that people can afford and one for the "slow lane" for people that can't, it is entirely possible that those two versions wouldn't match up, and those that can't afford to pay for the "fast lane" will literally receive different information than those that can.

I'm sure Mr. Wheeler will tell us that it isn't the consumer that will have to pay for the fast lane. I am sure he will tell us that he promises there will be protections for consumers to keep such abuses from occurring. But we all know how much corporations love to pass along any extra cost to consumers, so it isn't at all absurd to think that corporations will find some "legal" way of doing so under these newly-proposed rules. So, why set up a system that requires that kind of oversight? Why not craft rules that allow for true net neutrality in the United States?

One final comment. I don't understand how Mr. Wheeler and the FCC can possibly argue that broadband Internet access isn't a part of our telecommunications infrastructure. Especially not when the channel for public input Mr. Wheeler has set up is this email account, which means that the majority of those who send in an email will utilize broadband to do so.

So, Mr. Wheeler and the FCC, I urge you to not implement this horrible plan ending net neutrality in the United States and consider doing the right thing, declaring broadband a necessary part of our country's telecommunications infrastructure, and let net neutrality live to fight another day.

Thank you for your time,

A free, open, and non-preferential internet is crucial to the advancement of our society and all of mankind. To squander the power of the internet by allowing for tiered service and preferential treatment of high-paying customers goes against all that the internet stands for - free and open access to the world's information for all people regardless of social, economic, or political standing.

The internet is the great equalizer of our time. Don't ever allow it to be sold to the highest bidder.

The internet has the unique potential to give people unfettered access to the information they need to make responsible decisions as citizens and, so, to be the single most valuable tool available for citizens of a democracy. Were it the case that corporations could pay ISPs to discriminate against information by halting, slowing, or otherwise tampering with the transfer of any data, the internet would not realize this potential. For the sake of our country's political future, please do not let this happen.

To the FCC——

Please build any net neutrality argument upon solid legal standing. Specifically, this means reclassifying broadband under Title II of the Telecommunications Act of 1934.

706 authority from the Telecommunications Act has been repeatedly struck down in court after legal challenges by telecom companies. Take the appropriate steps to prevent this from happening again.

Sincerely,
Melissa Dopp

Free flow of information is critical to a free, democratic and economically viable society. A decision to give a few moneyed interests control of our communication system will doom our society to decline.

Consumers are not idiots. It's a well documented fact that the provision of high speed internet already nets the providers 90% NINETY PERCENT profit.
Corporate greed is ruining every aspect of American life, the only one true freedom afforded anymore is the information you can get from the internet.

Stop letting the corporations run the world, the whole point of government is to protect the people, not let the corporations dominate everything while lining the governments pockets.

Net Neutrality helps to keep the internet a place that everyone can use freely and openly without worry of extra fines and censorship. There are those who will be unable to continue with their work as a result of the absence of net neutrality. Internet freedom will be jeopardized without it, and that is something that nobody should have to give up.

The FCC is currently overseeing the greatest loss of press freedom in world history. I wonder if anyone there has considered what will happen to them, and to their families, when we are no longer allowed to even dig for the truth ourselves online. We certainly can't trust newspapers or TV for the truth—we only hear what corporations want us to hear, like the great, malevolent silence surrounding the horrors of fracking—which would be a non-issue without the net. Americans and their living environments would be plundered with absolutely no hope of salvation. When we can no longer find the truth, our power and our protections as citizens will be erased. That's the brink we hover upon, and I am amazed at the cowardly, compliant silence of the FCC.

The freedom of the Internet has done more for the exchange of ideas and expansion of culture than any other invention in the past few decades, and keeping that freedom for everyone -- not just those who can afford the "good" version -- is important to keep our nation from further sliding into economic depression. People rely on it for jobs and supplementary income, and without access to usable speeds an entire business model could easily become moribund.

The internet developed as a direct result of taxpayer-funded research and belongs to the commonwealth of taxpayers. To privatize the hierarchy of services available on the internet is to defraud all of us who made the development of the internet possible. Net neutrality now, net neutrality in 2020, net neutrality in 2222.

I would highly advise against using this tactic to try and control the public opinion and take one step closer to becoming a complete oligarchy. The people will not stand idly by while you reap the rewards of selfishness and corruption.

Backed into a corner even the smallest animal will become a raging beast. Keep net neutrality forever in place. For it is not yours to command. This country once stood for freedom and is now becoming a prison of not only bodies but minds.

Without the freedom to discover we will fall back through time to a much darker place and society. Please rethink this decision to kill net neutrality.

For 20 years I have been self-employed. I could not do my job without Internet access. I am small potatoes, but so are the other 10 million self employed people in the United States. Together we contribute significantly to the U.S. economy. My clients can't start paying a lot more just because someone thinks big telecom companies should be able to make more profit on the Internet at the expense of sole proprietorships and small business. At its essence this is another way to push more money to those who already have a lot while shrinking what is available to the vast majority.

Dear FCC Representative,

Net neutrality is of paramount importance to all the people of the USA. If corporate interests manage to create a tiered delivery system instead of an open and accessible to all internet, the consequences will be felt far and wide, including economic, political and social. If America is to keep pace with the emerging powers in today's socio-political landscape, an open internet is critical.

I urge you to reject any measures which will impinge on the fair and equal access of the internet to all citizens and communities regardless of how much or how little money they have available to them.

Thank you.

Not only that, but I am an every day citizen who also relies on the internet for just about everything! Restricting its speeds for people so already overly rich corporations can become even greedily richer off the demise of the masses is quite honestly sickening. Any actions on the contrary serve no purpose except to provide advantage for economic reasons and to potentially limit the extent of sharing and serving. You are considering a proposal that would permit ISP providers to pick and chose service standards based on the senders standing. The slowing &/or blocking of competitors is contrary to the US open market system. It effectively establishes a monopoly on services.

The fact that you are faced with making this decision is partially based on the slow erosion of free and open competition in many of today's markets and the resurgence of the influence of large corporations on business regulation. I strongly request that you vote to retain the internet as a business neutral entity and not allow individual businesses to set their own standards.

Keep the internet open. It is important to small business to have equal access as larger competitors. By limiting the internet speed to only those who can pay, you create an unequal playing field for business. Mr Wheeler,

I'm writing you about the proposed "open internet" regulation. As a consumer I'm highly concerned that these rules will allow internet service providers, who already give consumers sub par service, to further degrade our service. I'm concerned that the internet service providers wish to make the internet more like cable and less the open communications platform it is today.

Please classify broadband providers as title II common carriers it's the only fair way for us to move forward.

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners-----

FCC-----

The 21st century internet is an integral part of our economy, democracy, and communication systems. America is absolutely dependent on an open internet operating on net neutrality principles.

As such, you have an obligation to regulate it as a utility. Please assert your Title II authority, and stop trying to appease the telecom giants at the expense of everyone else.

Thank you,

All of us depend on the internet to stay connected to each other with billions of emails and interactions each day. My husband has taught hundreds of Master's and PHd courses online for the last decade which allow working people to finish up college degrees and better their lives and their economic opportunities for their families. My sister created websites to unite working people with jobs, homeless people with people willing to work and uniting 30 different nonprofits to help those in need.

Millions of us depend on the internet for everyday events and information to keep us a democracy and be employed. We are depending on you to make this essential decision looking out for our needs and not just large corporations or greed.

Net Neutrality is fundamental to the progress of our culture. A clear presentation of the current state of psychological development research can be found in Ken Wilber's and Robert Keagan's respective work. Considering we all start at an ego-centric square one, the internet is the most powerful resource to facilitating development atleast to the center of gravity of the advanced economic societies - world-centric / pluralistic / postmodern worldview. It is crucial for our society and for all of the stakeholders to have net neutrality and without it the damage to culture will be tragic. The mildest predictions include 400% increases in narcissistic tendencies and marked drops in empathy/sympathy traits in the coming generations. We need to avoid this disaster.

I strongly favor a completely un-restricted, neutral, and open internet. Different bandwidth for selected content is a dishonorable way for media to try to promote itself.

Like most citizens, I have no ability to read through the doublespeak to understand what is being proposed, so I cannot directly address what “ ‘rules’ for an ‘open’ internet” are under consideration.

Thank you.

Title II of the Communications Act of 1934 already grants you the authority to declare the internet a public utility and provide greater regulation to the telecommunications industry. It's long past time to declare the internet a utility.

It would simply be a tragedy to destroy the present and great future potential of the Internet.

Subject: Net Neutrality
Dear Mr. Wheeler,

I appreciate that your Email address is so open and available for the public to contact. I thank you for that. I am writing to voice DEEP opposition to the proposal to allow ISP's to engage in preferential treatment to speed up the internet lanes. For a while now, I've seen the internet as a lifeline for everyone across the world to disseminate information. That information leads to people like me who live in Washington to share information to those who live in Canada or Malaysia or China even. Such dissemination is what will bring about new understanding, new pushes for peace, and more understanding across the world. I understand that ISPs want to make a buck...there's no question that that is not a terrible thing. But what does deeply concern me, is that as the ISP industry gains more and more power over the flow of information, that such information will begin to be censored by throttling. Say I write a review about how terrible Centurylink is, and Centurylink happens to be my only choice for internet service. What is to stop them from censoring my voice by slowing down access to my webhost or other online services arbitrarily and demanding a premium if I want more speed? What's to stop Comcast from doing the same. What the ISP industry is proposing is akin to Ma Bell's telephone company where that company was in near complete control of the telephone service lines, had no expectation for competition, and no incentive to do anything to improve service. It literally could sit there and soak up profits with zero accountability to its customers. The reason that people like me so deeply condemn the FCC for its deplorable preferential treatment of firms like Centurylink, Comcast, Time Warner, and other very large ISPs is because it threatens our ability as citizens to engage in commerce, entertainment, and activism. It also threatens my livelihood as an employee for a small Ma/Pa 3rd Party ISP who could easily be quashed from the market by this unprecedented concentration of power. Nothing in my experience in this world would convince me that any company can be trusted to exercise fair-minded, ethical executions of power of its own volition. ISPs are out to make a buck. That's fine. But what isn't fine is them lobbying your committee to tear away open and free internet access nationwide. Would you trust a private company to manage your water utility and set its own rules trusting that they'll be fair? Would you trust your power utility to provide you reasonable and fair access to electricity without gouging you into poverty? Would you trust companies to endure criticism without trying to shut you up? Most rational people today would state a resounding NO to all those questions. I ask you and your committee to uphold the values of the free and open internet and as our public-appointed regulator...that you actually regulate. Don't let the ISPs push you around, don't let them intimidate you, threaten you, or otherwise direct your path. You must act in OUR, the public's interest. Please Save Our Net and protect us from companies that would siphon more money off us in the name of prioritization. It's not right, it's not ethical, it's not moral. It's a power grab, and it's pure unadulterated greed!

With kind regards,

This is an obvious benefit to a few major corporations, but the damage done to a fair and mostly unregulated market in the internet far outweighs the profits and God-power these corporations would gain. We've already seen too much power go to those in charge of our news and our television stations. We need to broaden, not narrow, the access to information we have in this free nation.

Mr Wheeler,

First let me be absolutely clear. Your proposed rules for Internet "fast lanes" are garbage.

We both know you have been bought and paid for and care little what the actual public thinks but I write this in the hopes you have even a tiny shred of decency and you abolish your planned net neutrality rules.

You are working very hard to destroy one of the greatest achievements of mankind all for the sake that multi billion dollar companies can make more money.

America's Internet is worse than some third world countries and yet you want to continue the trend of our Internet falling behind.

I beg you sir, all vitrol aside, please don't kill the internet. Please classify the Internet as a Type II commodity like phone lines.

I pray you actually care what the public thinks but I'm very much afraid I have just witnessed the death of the Internet and the rise of corporate Internet due to your indifference for the public.

Please prove me wrong Mr. Wheeler. Please don't act like the corporate shill that, sadly, myself and many others believe you to be

The internet is central to American life and the modern economy. It makes no sense to regulate it as a private "service." It is a public utility and should be treated as such. Open access to the internet is a fundamental principle of its structure and has only lead to vast innovation in the past decades. To restrict this would only give more economic and social control to the monopolies that "own" the infrastructure. American taxes built the vast majority of the network, leaving the companies to construct last mile infrastructure. They feel they have the right to make a profit from public subsidies and customers, while providing terrible service and not updating infrastructure as promised. We are the laughing stock of the western world. We already have the slowest internet, why have the most restricted?

I was deeply disappointed to hear that the Federal Communications Commission is planning on implementing rule changes that would allow Internet service providers to pay for special, faster lanes to deliver their content. In an environment where large corporations can pay for faster service, start-ups and every day Internet users won't be able to compete and we will lose the open, free-flowing exchange of information that has made the Internet so dynamic and integral to our lives.

The FCC can ensure it has the tools to act by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service. I urge you to reject the new rules and to take this vital and common sense step toward protecting net neutrality.

Dear FCC Commissioners,

I'm very concerned about telecommunications companies such as Verizon and Comcast getting lax regulation and changing the Internet as we now know it.

As former FCC Commissioner Michael Copps points out, telecommunications companies should be regulated just as their telephone companies counterparts and should not be in a completely different category which would allow them to create two different speeds of accessibility for the public.

We need a healthy, vibrant community and society which cares about the well-being of all its citizens – not rules and regulations which only serve to put excessive profits in the already wealthy who then are likely to offshore those profits in tax havens, rather than allowing them to circulate over and over in local communities for basic necessities, like food, housing, shelter, education, and health care.

Please reconsider your plans and instead recognize that true health and well-being of the masses is more fruitful and wholesome than perpetuating profiteering by a few (who already have so much). Please return the status of telecommunications companies to the category where they will be regulated just as telephone companies are, and are not receiving special exemption.

Dear Mr. Wheeler,

Why should ISPs have the ability to choose what I, as the end user, have fast access to?

By not banning the "fast lanes" you are in effect supporting them because we know companies (ISPs) will seek out every advantage they can get.

Also how do you expect a small company to become the next Facebook or Google if they do not have access to these "fast lanes".

I see a very grim future where only the largest and most well funded companies succeed rather than the most innovative or ingenious. This only creates barriers to entry which stifles competition.

We live in a country where competition brings out the best for the consumer more often than not.

Please change your plan to ban "fast lanes" or any sort of pay for faster connections to certain sites.

Subject: I can't believe that you didn't listen to us

Hi Tom Wheeler and Nancy Pelosi,

I cannot believe that you issued a proposal for "preferred" treatment. This is simply the same proposal you issued before, creating a 2-speed internet, charging both consumers and content providers, inhibiting entrepreneurship and further degrading the performance of the internet for US consumers.

Tom, stop representing the cable companies and start representing US consumers. Nancy, stop this regulation before it is implemented--choke it in the crib. It's hurting us, your constituents (I live near you, in your district, in San Francisco).

As a former head of the National Cable Television Association, your Chairman is anything but impartial. As a resident of San Francisco, and an avid global internet user, I must ask you to remove the duopoly offered in most places by cable and DSL providers.

In addition, "double dipping"--charging both the consumer (caps and charges for speed) and the content provider--a la Netflix--is an egregious exercise of duopoly powers.

FCC, your job is to represent us consumers, not the cable providers. Your job is to improve our internet access and speed while reducing cost. Your job is to keep caps and access fees suppressed.

Nancy Pelosi, your job is to protect content providers, like Twitter, Google, Apple and others. And BTW--all those companies are HQ'd or nearby your Congressional district.

Please, don't allow a "two-speed", more expensive, more limited internet. Start to compete with South Korea and other countries offering better, uncapped speed at lower cost. This is about jobs, freedom and our economy.

Please build any net neutrality argument upon solid legal standing. Specifically, this means reclassifying broadband under Title II of the Telecommunications Act of 1934.

Mr wheeler,

We need net neutrality,

If the large providers want world war three,bring it on in spades. There is no middle ground. They should be regulated like a utility. They are already falling behind other countries. Every region in America especially rural, and isolated pockets should have fiberoptic cable and the fastest service possible. If we have to take away the privledge of serving us so be it. They work for us.

William Murphy ([REDACTED]) writes:

Dear Mr. Wheeler,

The only reaction any reasonable person can have to the recent proposal from the FCC in regards to "net neutrality" is anger, pure unadulterated anger and frustration at the consumer once again being "screwed". Aren't you [the FCC] the organization that is supposed to regulate and protect the consumer from monopolies taking advantage of their customers. Why the sudden turn around in position? Does it have to do with your time as a cable company shill?

Consumers are pissed off and sick and tired of being over billed, double dipped, manipulated and constantly told how they can and can't use content that they legally purchased. The ISP's want it both ways (well more like several ways to screw us). They want to charge for access to their networks, charge for use of their networks, charge for their content and charge yet again for any extra bandwidth used by the customer. They charge a tiered system for speed, with no need to guarantee the speed is actually delivered. They already charge more if you don't bundle and pay for their other services.

Now, they want to slow things down for some content intentionally where and when it benefits them financially and then "speed up" the content once they have made the companies pay. That is called extortion dillhole, not innovation. Why in God's green Earth(I genuinely wanted to put lots of curse words here) are you're supporting this type of shenanigans? It is completely and utterly beyond me and anyone else with a brain.

You should be telling the cable and other ISP's that they already are double charging the consumer enough and that they should invest in their own networks to increase capacity to keep up with demand, changes in the market place and what the demands and needs of the consumer are. THAT WOULD BE INNOVATION. Extortion is NOT innovation! It really isn't hard to understand, even my 8 year old gets it. Why the world can't you? I bet you're looking at a nice cozy position somewhere working for the industry you're protecting once you leave your tax-payer funded job. I'd bet my butt on that one. Do your duty, do your job. Protect the CONSUMER and protect actual innovation (not blackmail masquerading as innovation) and stop thinking about yourself and bowing into greed and stupidity.

I honestly don't know why I'm writing this, it will not even be read and will fall on completely deaf ears. All you see is your cozy job after you screw over the American people. I really wish there were some people in Washington who weren't scumbags.

By the way, if you don't end up with a cushy job somewhere in the industry, I will write an open letter of apology. I'm not too worried about needing to do that though.

I'm writing in support of an open internet and to express my concern about the establishment of rules that would allow companies to pay ISPs for faster internet connections to consumers. I feel this action will discourage innovation and hurt startups in favor of large, established firms. I also feel it will give ISPs the ability to make more deals such as those recently reached between Netflix and Comcast / Verizon. These costs will ultimately be passed on to consumers like me who will have to pay my provider (Comcast in this case) both for monthly internet access, as well as access to specific content like Netflix. I believe the internet will become the dominant medium for communication in the future, and therefore do not see why ISPs should not be considered a Tier 2 provider.

Net Neutrality as a concept is integral in the future of communications and the future of our nation and its ability to compete against developed nations. ISPs should be treated as utility providers. Mr. Wheeler, America has become what it is in the last 15 years because of free and impartial access to the internet. Any business, big or small, can ply their wares to the biggest audience. This stimulates the economy at both the micro and macro level by ensuring an even playing field. I realize the phrase "even playing field" is not something that large corporations want. They would highly prefer to be able to stack the cards in their own favor and continue the trend of the rich getting richer at the expense of everyone else who doesn't happen to be in that position. To me, this is tremendously un-American and counter to the values on which our country was founded and for which we have previously fought and paid dearly.

Up until now, I am not able to find an upside for the most recent changes to the rules you and your agency are suggesting. This is blatantly in favor of your previous employers and clearly to the disadvantage of the majority of Americans. I cannot understand why on earth you would deliberately do such a thing, knowing full well the consequences as I'm sure you do.

I would like to voice my vehement disagreement with the changes to net neutrality. I honestly think you should be ashamed of yourself, but I doubt that is possible when you check your bank account to see how happy the corporations are with your leadership.

For many people the internet is not merely a source of entertainment but it is a life line for people who are disabled , for people who want to learn and grow for people who value the importance of communication with friends family and the world. Many have long standing friendships with people they have never met face to face.

The FCC has done very little about serious problems such as telemarketing scams that prey upon people especially the elderly. I am bombarded with credit card scams and senior medical alerts etc. I hear that these companies are so hard to pursue because they origination in other countries and have the money to avoid responsibility for their action. This is the type of issue that should be foremost with the FCC since these scams result in identity theft and fraud. Trying to make the Internet a corporate run business entity and annihilating our right to travel this communication highway and forcing us to pay for this personal freedom will erode our way of life as it currently exists. People are struggling financially as it is us . How can you possibly justify taking away our right to personal expression? I don't think any of you have really even thought about the implications probably because you are intoxicated with the possibility that the government will reap a profit without looking at the price that will be paid in terms of lost freedom and its impact on the social and health status of the people you pay your salaries, citizens who pay taxes that support your jobs.

For God's sake don't pass this . Have a heart and go after the criminals that take advantage of the laxity that exists when it comes to fraud and scam opportunities. Thank You.

All of these would be damaged greatly if some lanes were faster than others. By default, it would make the sources not in the "fast lane" the "slow lanes", putting them at a marked disadvantage to those who are able to afford the faster service. This would be a disaster for our future and it is imperative, on behalf of the American people, that net neutrality is maintained and internet access is optimized for all who need it. Thank you.

How about you listen to the people of this country instead of your corporate buddies and enforce Net Neutrality! I'm sure you won't since your CLEARLY bought and paid for but I figured I'd try to appeal to what's left of your soul.

Hello, Tom

The net neutrality thing is popping up again which has me concerned, because I was under the impression that we were on a path of making sure the internet became a better place with better access to content, much like those of other countries (Korea and Japan come to mind).

But now after hearing this deal Netflix made with Comcast, which is utterly ridiculous to me, it made me realize that we still have plenty to be concerned about. Ill-fated deals, huge company mergers that are blatant attempts at creating monopolies, and former cable lobbyists becoming FCC employees? No, we are definitely on the wrong track here, Tom.

There is still much for me to learn about all of this, Tom, but the one thing I do know is that the Internet is the greatest invention in recent history (some could argue all of history), and instead of helping it flourish and become as good as it can and should be, it's being brazenly stifled by a handful of men and women in suits whose only interest is to line their pockets, ESPECIALLY at the expense of everyone else AND our future. I'm still wondering what happened to that money we gave the telecoms back when they were supposed to fix their infrastructure in the mid 2000's.

With all that being said though, I guess the main point I'd like to make is that I am in full support in whatever efforts you take to see it through that ISPs are to be considered Common Carriers, because from my understanding, it is a step in the right direction, and will limit a lot of the damage they can do to an already damaged system.

Thank you for your time.

Dear Chairman Wheeler,

I demand that Congress protect freedom and openness on the Internet by passing legislation to protect network neutrality.

The Internet is our most democratic medium. It has grown exponentially, fueled innovation and altered how we communicate. Network neutrality is the guiding principle that has allowed for these advancements.

Now, for-profit interests want to violate the principle of network neutrality in order to increase their own profit margins. They must not be allowed to destroy the free and open culture of the web.

I strongly urge you and your colleagues in Congress to support robust net neutrality legislation that prohibits network operators from blocking, impeding or interfering with any lawful Internet traffic or prioritizing any content or services.

Extremely Concerned Citizen,

Subject: Maintaining an open internet
To Whom It May Concern,

Following today's deliberations upon and passage of Chairman Wheeler's rule proposal, I would like to submit my thoughts as part of the public commentary. I was pleased to see that all of the members share the same goal: an open internet. Having said that, I believe the regulations proposed by Chairman Wheeler are appropriate. I have two comments regarding the proposal: 1) the idea of 'prioritization' is not monolithic, and 2) the current language is still prone to abuse

In his objection to the proposal, Commissioner O'Rielly's stated that "prioritization" is not a bad word. While true, I believe this position oversimplifies the issue. It is true that some network prioritization is inevitable in the management of internet services, but that is fundamentally different from what I believe the proposal is targeting. Specifically, prioritization in data delivery based upon a plan purchased by the consumer is not necessary or conducive to the values of an open internet. The internet has existed as a data communication vector through which consumers may access all data, and there is no reason to change this system outside of the selfish profit for providers.

I am concerned, however, that this caveat ("the customer is entitled to access all the data for which they have paid") could still allow such discrimination if payment schemes are not regulated. If providers are allowed to introduce 'packages' of data plans which favor certain forms of data over others, then consumers are technically receiving the data they have paid to access. Without a stipulation requiring that all plans include unbiased access to the entire Web I fear that any rules adopted by the FCC may fail to accomplish its goals.

I respectfully ask that you consider these points in your deliberations, and I thank you for your consideration!

Sincerely,

Jasraj Marjara

Members of the FCC,

My name is Greg Keller. I am an American Citizen from the state of Ohio.

I would like you to know that I support treating Internet Service Providers as Common Carriers under the law. The internet is swiftly becoming a necessity in modern society and must be treated as a utility in the same vein as Telephone communication. The current state of local ISP monopolies who make many daily network traffic decisions with little to no direct oversight is unsustainable and unconscionable. It will ensure power for the few and not the people.

Please treat Internet Service Providers as Common Carriers under the law

Please consider my opinion when making your decision. (If you or one of your staffers even reads these)

Dear FCC,

I am writing to oppose rules that will allow for discrimination on the Internet - where the wealthy can purchase faster Internet service and everyone else continues to have slower service.

I do not want telecom giants and wealthy Internet companies to determine the future of the Internet. I want new ideas to flourish on the Internet and not be blocked because they do not have sufficient funds to purchase fast service and compete.

I do not want the Internet to be turned into another vehicle that allows money to flow from working Americans to the wealthiest -- where web-based services like Netflix purchase faster service and pass the costs on to consumers.

The proposal being considered would kill rather than protect Net Neutrality and allow rampant discrimination online. The Internet should be viewed as a public good and should be operated consistent with our rights to Freedom of Speech and Freedom of the Press. Turning the Internet into a pay to play scheme is unacceptable.

Dear Commissioners,

I was extremely disappointed to learn that you voted against net neutrality and for Internet «fast lanes» and urge you to reconsider. In doing so, you're allowing ISPs to double-dip by charging both customers and third parties for the same bandwidth, and you're enabling vertically integrated monopolies. History will not be kind to this decision.

Bits are bits.

The alternative is equivalent to saying that it's OK for AT&T to degrade telephone service to Verizon's customers unless Verizon pays. If ISPs didn't effectively have regional monopolies at least competition could push things to sanity but most people are stuck with a single Internet carrier as their only option which leaves things hopelessly distorted.

FCC——

The 21st century internet is an integral part of our economy, democracy, and communication systems. America is absolutely dependent on an open internet operating on net neutrality principles.

As such, you have an obligation to regulate it as a utility. Please assert your Title II authority, and stop trying to appease the telecom giants at the expense of everyone else.

TO: Chairman Tom Wheeler: Commissioner Mignon Clyburn: Commissioner Jessica Rosenworcel: Commissioner Ajit Pai: Commissioner Michael O'Rielly:

Your proposal to implement a "fast lane" internet strategy is biased towards the ISP (comcast, TWC, COx etc) and would allow them to essentially extort "bandwith protection" from the smaller internet users. The "five cable families" will be able to overcharge, the Espy page seller, the blogger exercising his own free speech, the unknown entrepreneur on the cusp of the next big innovation, thereby allowing only the content they want to succeed to do so. Otherwise, <BOOM> "Oh what a shame your online storefront just died in the radiator springs of the internet."

I urge you to change from this course. The cynic in me believes that the Lobbying dollars spent on this farce are sure to keep you and your commissioners in the lifestyles of which you are accustomed and I'm sure you will sleep well at night. The idealist in me implores you to shut down the ISPs and keep the internet open and available to all.

This rule does more than promote the corporatization of internet access--it relegates independent sites to an inferior internet on the 'slow lane' and creates a HUGE barrier to entry for new start ups that may compete with--or directly challenge--incumbent technologies and corporations. This rule will KILL start-up innovation and enshrine the power of Big Telecom, who will make the internet as awful as cable television.

Please protect Net neutrality to preserve an open internet and urge the FCC to assert reclassification authority of broadband under title II.

As you pointed out that these new rules do not authorize and "fast lane", these new rules do not ban them either. Meaning internet companies will end up trading money for better service. This in turn, could destroy the internet and its freedom that we all love and enjoy, as we know it today.

Ladies and gentlemen of the FCC,

The rules change you are considering is simply unacceptable. You will be drastically tilting the playing field to support those already at the top of the heap in terms of media distribution, causing access and competition problems for smaller content deliverers. Bottom line, this is the wrong direction for Internet governance, and I hope that you will strongly reconsider your stance.

Commisioners and Chairman Wheeler

Apparently my first message fell on deaf ears when sent to "OpenInternet." Please find it below.

It's time. It's time to end this game. Internet Service Providers are essentially sanctioned monopolies in this country. That's bad enough and a topic for an entirely separate email to Congress and yourself. For today, however, we will accept that as an unfortunate fact of life. Given that they are sanctioned monopolies, they must be regulated and held to a higher standard than other industries. The accepted conclusion is that free market cannot function when a single entity controls an entire industry. Why then, do you expect these I.S.P.'s to regulate themselves and ever operate in a manner that benefits competitors and the internet as a whole?

The simple solution is inches in front of your face yet you hold back for no reason. Classify I.S.P.'s as common carries. Do it today, before there are abuses that harm innovators, the economy, the internet, and the American people. Nothing is lost by taking this option, except perhaps friendship with these corporations. Sir, you are not their friend. You are their parole officer. The American people are your friend and we all clearly want an open internet free from the necessity of deals like those currently being brokered by Netflix.

The internet has completely eclipsed landline telephones in importance. People live their lives through the internet more than they ever did through a telephone. Commerce, socializing, politics, and so much more happens on the internet. If ever there was a more clear justification of the need for Common Carrier designation, I have not seen it.

Do this today. There is no reason to wait or to hold back.

Best,

Hi, my name is Tim Hunter and I'd like to voice my support for ISP being seen as "common carriers".

I do not believe companies should have control over the regulation of information flow. It is a shady practice that would potentially stifle start up companies and could very well stagnate our free economy if carried too far. We live in a very technology driven age, where companies live and die by the internet. To give companies regulation over the flow of this technology is to give them a power which effects the very foundation of our technological age. Please, be wise about whom you're giving power to and make the internet a neutral technology provider.

I can't believe you don't listen to the American people. The FCC is there to protect the American citizens from any diminishment of the freedom of expression. The American air ways belong to the citizens of this country and yet the FCC continues to cater to the wishes of the corporations. Corporations are not people and your vote today puts control squarely in the hands of the view despite the needs and desires of the many. The internet is the last frontier of the American airways and now the FCC has made moves to once again hand over the public's property to corporations who have never behaved in the interest of the American people. They have a clear and rightful obligation to the stock holders. The FCC has a clear and rightful obligation to the American people and you have failed at this time and time again. 90% of all media is owned by 6 corporations! Only 6 corporations decide what content we get in all arenas but the internet and now you have moved to allow one more part of our freedom to be controlled by the view. Have you ever travelled across the US? Haven't you noticed that every state, every county and every city have almost all the exact same programming? This is the fault of the FCC. Journalism is dying because fewer and fewer people are needed to report on less and less content. Content decided by 6 singular corporations.

You should be ashamed of yourselves. It is partly your fault that there is limited political discussion, extreme polarization and reality TV. Yes your fault that local programming, local news and local issues are being turned over to the driving interests of 6 corporations.

( I just kid about the reality TV, I just hate it that's all. So ok you get a pass on that)

Shame, shame shame. You have now made it possible for the ultimate homogenization of the internet. Some day you will look back on this and realize how much you contributed to the decline of dialog and innovation.

The Walmart internet of the future will be your fault.

Most sincerely,

Oliver Gold

Subject: Letter from a citizen

Dear FCC members,

I am writing to express my concerns as an American citizen. When our founding fathers spoke of the 1st

Amendment with regard to a free press, the intent was that the government was not to interfere with the public's right to criticize our government. The idea was that the free press would be a watch dog over our government to help assure that the people were not unduly misinformed or otherwise influenced by any single interest that would lead to a reduction of our personal freedoms.

Furthermore our founding fathers were severely opposed and distrustful of large corporations. Until the 1800s corporations were restricted from engaging in campaigns and even owning stock in other corporations. Until the 1800s corporations had limitations on property ownership and lifespan. It was the common view amongst our founding fathers and our legislators that corporate interests were not necessarily in the benefit of the American citizens and there charters were thusly limited to practicing their trade with the permission of state and federal regulations.

Today we see that 90% of all media is controlled by just 6 corporations. These corporations have a single interest and that is to make profits for their shareholders and not necessarily the interest of the public good, yet the FCC still refuses to regulate just how much control of the American public airwaves and media are controlled by an ever increasing concentration of corporations.

Today I read that the FCC is now going even further in allowing corporations to control information access. In response to the Supreme Court ruling I expected the FCC would do more to keep the internet a well regulated communication network by making it fall under the same rules as other telecommunication laws instead of treating it like media. By allowing the extremely small handful of corporations the ability to charge more for certain content the FCC is doing nothing to protect small voices with limited resources from being overwhelmed by large corporations with all the resources they would ever need thus effectively crushing competition necessary for inspiring new innovations and the freedom of expression.

As I see it the FCC has been little more than a tool for corporations to bend the original intent of our constitution and understanding of what it takes to have a free society into something that allows them to legally pursue their own interests even if it is at the cost of the erosion of the first amendment. The FCC has allowed corporations to control the public dialog which in turn allows them to help shape public policy which is not necessarily in the interest of the American people as the corporations who help control the dialog have only their own interests in mind. Two plus two equals four and in this instance the FCC has been complicit in changing the free press from a watchdog to a megaphone for corporations to control the dialog.

I'm not a far left reactionary nor am I an activist. I am simply an American citizen who, perhaps naively, believes that our government is for the people of the people and by the people. I believe that it is not unreasonable to assume that those who control the media are able to also control the dialog. Years of empirical evidence demonstrates that advertising works. It is not such a great leap to put content available through the media together with advertising. It is time to start acting in the interest of the people. It is time for the FCC to put a leash on how much of the public airwaves and internet is ultimately controlled by a handful of corporations. Can't you see it is not in the best interest of freedom of the press and freedom of expression to allow fewer and fewer interests to decide on what information we the people have access to? It is demonstrable that deregulation hasn't led to greater competition, but it has instead led to the ability of larger more powerful corporations to swallow up smaller companies and ultimately have more control over more markets.

Please start acting in our interests. Please bring back the spirit of the founding fathers. Please give the public airwaves back to the citizens without the undue influence of mega corporations.

Thank you kindly,

Oliver Gold

However, what you did today is take us one step closer to an internet without freedom of choice.

I once again implore you to reclassify ISPs as common carriers so that data is treated as data and the ISPs have no control over which websites I choose to visit (which you have effectively granted them by allowing them to throttle companies with less money).

I am heavily disappointed in your decision, and hope that you reconsider this decision.

To whom it may concern,

My name is Charles, and I am writing to comment on the FCC's recent proposed changes to Net Neutrality.

Allowing Internet Service Providers to give preferential treatment to content providers is contrary to the concept of Net Neutrality. Fundamentally, the word preferential is the opposite of neutral. Any inclusion of restrictions or requirements of "commercially reasonable" terms does not change this fact.

It would be detrimental to competition and innovation by raising the barrier to entry for content providers. New companies would become exceedingly difficult to start because they would not have the wherewithal to pay Internet Service Providers for faster speeds that established companies employ.

If the FCC is truly supportive of Net Neutrality, I urge them to reclassify all Internet Service Providers as Title II Common Carriers as laid out in the Telecommunications Act of 1934. From my understanding, this will force all Internet Service Providers to act as data carriers and restrict them from altering the flow of information in any manner.

I do NOT support allowing Internet Service Providers to give preferential treatment to content providers. Please refrain from implementing this policy.

I ask that the FCC reclassify Internet Service Providers as Title II Common Carriers.

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

To the FCC——

Please build any net neutrality argument upon solid legal standing. Specifically, this means reclassifying broadband under Title II of the Telecommunications Act of 1934.

706 authority from the Telecommunications Act has been repeatedly struck down in court after legal challenges by telecom companies. Take the appropriate steps to prevent this from happening again.

Doing otherwise kills competition and the free market, and infringes access to information -- this is nothing more than a form of company-sponsored censorship, and as a government agency in a nation which supports liberty and free speech, you should be ashamed of yourselves for even considering granting telecomm companies the right to offer anything but unimpeded access to the internet. We pay for internet access, we should have access to the WHOLE of the internet, without degradation of service to the little guys because they can't afford to pay for a fast lane.

Hi,

Don't screw this up, Tom. I think it's pretty obvious at this point that your interests aren't in align with those of the general public. The media's not on your side for this. At all. However, I like both sides of the story so if you can give me a reasonable argument for net neutrality, I'm all ears. I can even be understanding if you answer truthfully with something along the lines of:

"I have no choice, the telecom industry pays me too much to stand up to them."

or..

"I don't have a strong enough character/personality to lobby for the interest of the public against the giants in the telecom industry.

Anyways, really looking forward to your political excuses.

Dear Commissioner,

I would like to communicate my opinion on what I have heard about the FCC's plans to alter what most of know as Net Neutrality. From what I gather, it is being considered to allow a so-called Fast Lane or, if not specifically allowing for such things certainly not banning them. Telecom companies will certainly take advantage and will trade money for more bandwidth and greater speed and while this will be a great situation for those companies who can afford it it would be disastrous for absolutely everyone else. Large corporations already have more than enough wealth and power and giving them access to open these 'fast lanes' will certainly enrich their bottom lines but at what cost to everyone else? What we will see is what I would like to refer to as "The Wal-Mart Effect" wherein large companies will be able to establish near monopolies on the world-wide-web. Just as in the physical world with a brick-and-mortar store, you are more than free to open your own but when a Wal-Mart comes to town they make it impossible for those smaller stores to survive. This is what will happen on the net because large and wealthy companies will use their wealth and influence to stifle smaller companies and that will slow innovation and growth. It will further concentrate wealth and power into the hands of the already wealthy and powerful.

In summary I would like to ask that the FCC include language to specifically ban the opening of these 'Fast Lanes' and keep the net on a level playing field for all of us. If this is not done then it will be yet another brick removed from the foundation of this once great nation and so, like Rome centuries before us, we will fall. Thank you for your time and attention.

Hello FCC:

As a small business owner, I am dismayed that the FCC is considering NOT classifying the Internet as a common carrier/public utility. Part of the reason why the Internet has been such a boon for our business is that we are able to compete with established companies with deep pockets without having to pay an extortion fee to ISPs. We shouldn't have to pay for decades of mismanagement by Time Warner, AT&T, Comcast, and others.

Adding insult to injury, the fact that these ISPs are oligarchies severely restricts our options. Now, I know that the cable lobbyists are spending obscene amounts of money to sway opinions, but I would hope that the FCC, which exists to serve the American public, would recognize that fact.

Once again, the Internet MUST BE classified as a public utility and the creation of paid priority lanes must be specifically outlawed. Don't fall behind other countries who have taken this step. Even the United Nations recognizes the Internet as a basic human right.

Don't give in to greed. Please.

Thank you.

Fast Lanes do not preserve Net neutrality in the slightest, what you are doing is gagging the poor, while giving loudspeakers to the wealthy. All you had to do was reclassify ISP's as common carriers, it couldn't be simpler than that.

Your decision to undermine Net neutrality, is a betrayal of your position as FCC Chairman. You choose to damn the many, all to benefit the few.

I believe the proposed rule that would allow companies to pay for faster delivery of content should be scrapped. By its very definition this will create two internet experiences, a fast lane for the paying companies, and the slower lane for everyone else. I also believe broadband providers should be reclassified as utilities, as they are the most important service of the new connected economy.

I know you all have read the out-pouring of opposition to the proposal of Mr. Wheeler, but in case you haven't, I'd just like to lend my voice to the millions that are against allowing ISPs to prioritize internet traffic in any way.

I realize that the wording does not grant permission, but it also doesn't ban the practice. Given the quality of our Internet access compared to other modern nations, I think it's safe to say the ISPs will take full advantage of the wording and use it to leverage their profits at the expense of the consumer.

The internet is probably the greatest thing humanity has seen realized, and we as humans need to be diligent in protecting its openness and freedom for everyone. To this end, I would like to see the explicit banning of prioritization in any form, and just maybe the rest of the world will look at the USA and think "wow, they've got some really progressive technical legislation" instead of the usual "well, there's the USA and its unchecked capitalism in politics again".

here's a good summary from over a decade ago:
<http://www.worldofends.com/>

Number 8 captures everything:

8.<http://www.worldofends.com/#BM\_8> The Internet's three virtues:

a<<http://www.worldofends.com/#BM8a>>. No one owns it

b.<<http://www.worldofends.com/#BM8b>> Everyone can use it

c<<http://www.worldofends.com/#BM8c>>. Anyone can improve it and if you don't feel like reading, here's a nice video:

<http://youtu.be/wtt2aSV8wdw>

At the very least, Mr. Wheeler's history would make anything less than full net neutrality look like just more of the same money running politics, except more and worse.

Thanks for your time, and please carefully consider that none of us owns the internet and none of us should own it, but that we all benefit from it.

FCC,

If we as a country wish to remain competitive we cannot be taking the internet out at the knees. Allowing ISP's to force users to pay to reach content, as well as forcing content providers to pay to reach users, is not just extortion, it is crippling for us as a country and as a people.

Some ISP's complain that they do not have enough bandwidth to serve all of their customers. We have the technology, already, to serve all of the bandwidth currently needed, which is seen with Google Fiber, as well as the various municipal fiber services currently running throughout various parts of the country. When we have obvious solutions to current problems, we should not allow companies to shy away from a better, brighter future. It is unbelievable that we should, as a people, at any point allow private companies to consume scarce resources, i.e. the publicly owned ground they have laid their cables in, and then refuse to meet the needs of the people stuck within their obvious monopoly.

Speaking of monopolies, since this whole debacle has arisen since ISP's are not classified as common carriers, reclassify ISP's as common carriers. There is a finite amount of space for all of the wires and cabling that is required for the internet, the same as it is for electric and gas. As such, there is a burden ISP's, and anyone who wants to make use of public goods for private gain, must carry if they desire to continue making use of those public goods.

Please end this madness.

Subject: Internet is Public Utility

Hello FCC:

As a small business owner, I am dismayed that the FCC is considering NOT classifying the Internet as a common carrier/public utility. Part of the reason why the Internet has been such a boon for our business is that we are able to compete with established companies with deep pockets without having to pay an extortion fee to ISPs. We shouldn't have to pay for decades of mismanagement by Time Warner, AT&T, Comcast, and others.

Adding insult to injury, the fact that these ISPs are oligarchies severely restricts our options. Now, I know that the cable lobbyists are spending obscene amounts of money to sway opinions, but I would hope that the FCC, which exists to serve the American public, would recognize that fact.

Once again, the Internet MUST BE classified as a public utility and the creation of paid priority lanes must be specifically outlawed. Don't fall behind other countries who have taken this step. Even the United Nations recognizes the Internet as a basic human right.

Don't give in to greed. Please.

Thank you.

Chairman Tom Wheeler

Dear Chairman Wheeler,

As an Illinois consumer who depends on a fast, affordable web connection, I am concerned that a free and open Internet is now in grave danger.

Dear Chairman Wheeler:

We are troubled by reports that the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) plans to propose new rules that would open the door for big Internet providers to offer a "fast lane" to the highest bidders. Such a proposal would water down consumer protections, serve as a slippery slope to discrimination against certain web traffic, and force consumers like me to suffer higher rates and slower speeds. Moreover, Comcast's business practices have been so underhanded that the company was forced to change its name. For example, in Illinois Comcast sent a third party contractor to certain internet customers' homes while knowing this contractor was under suspicion for murdering one female customer. The contractor then proceeded to rape and murder another young woman. Please consider the impact of this proposal on the users of the internet rather than the benefit to ruthless companies like Comcast.

Thank you for your consideration.

Wendi Hangebrauck

That violates the spirit of "net neutrality."

Please, stand up for consumers, protect net neutrality, and fight for the free and open Internet.

Sincerely,

Subject: Net neutrality is the only honest solution.
To whom it may concern:

I am a 100% supporter of net neutrality. I do not understand how any ISP has a right to monitor where my traffic goes and slow it accordingly. The point of an ISP is to give me access to the internet, and I pay them for that privilege. Content providers also pay ISPs for their own connection to this same network. Under the new policy, my ISP would be able to charge content providers a second time for the connection they already purchased. One bit of data from fcc.gov<<http://fcc.gov>> does not put less strain on the system than a bit of data from Netflix, so why should they be charged differently?

I have heard the excuse of "premium" connections. This is just smoke and mirrors that the ISPs are using to disguise what is really going on. Unless the ISPs are going to bury a second "premium" cable that goes directly to my house, they will be selectively slowing some data and allowing other to pass through unmolested for an additional charge.

Imagine, for a moment, a startup company on the web. They provide excellent content and a business model which is significantly improved over the established services. Normally, net neutrality would make sure that this startup can compete, forcing the existing services to improve if they wish to remain competitive. This is the very soul of capitalism. If established companies are the only ones which can afford to pay for the premium lines, then startups will not be able to compete, no matter how good their ideas are. Then, lacking competition, the web will stagnate and our economy will suffer as a result. Net neutrality is not just good for the consumer, it is good for the companies themselves. Monopolies are never a good thing.

To be frank, anything other than full net neutrality is legalizing monopolies and gives ISPs the legal authority to rob content providers blind. Please make whatever classification changes are necessary to prevent net neutrality from being jeopardized. Persevere when the courts refuse your changes, we the people have already had to do this several times to prevent overreach by CISP and SOPA. Unfortunately, common people cannot affect net neutrality, it is in your hands.

Subject: The internet isn't a private service

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

The modern economy would collapse without the internet and American life would be extraordinarily disrupted. It's a simple fact that the internet is a public utility, not a private service. It's time we regulated it as such.

I am in favor of classifying broadband as a utility.

It clearly is no longer an optional consumer luxury but now an essential part of 21st century life.

Dear Sir/Madam:

I appeal to you to keep the internet neutral and to reject the proposed legislation by Mr. Wheeler and others to decide what we should and shouldn't see. The internet belongs to every human being on this planet and not to a government, corporation, a military force, or some extra-parliamentary body.

This is a platform for people from across borders, cultures, religions, nationalities, to share their ideas and perspectives on what goes on in our world. The proposed legislation will take this freedom away from us. Do not allow it to happen.

Sincerely,

Mr. Z. Moolla

Allowing internet service providers to create internet “fast lanes” and “slow lanes” would do nothing more than allow them to extort payments from companies like Netflix. It’s time to admit that the internet is a public utility, not a private “service.”

Maintaining Net Neutrality is vital for a range of reason, from preventing new and innovative services being stifled, to ensuring that consumers aren't effectively forced to pay extra to the ISP for using particular services such as Netflix. Some people have tried to paint this issue as the government attempting to control web site content. That is clearly not the case. Please help keep Net Neutrality.

706 authority from the Telecommunications Act has been repeatedly struck down in court after legal challenges by telecom companies. Take the appropriate steps to prevent this from happening again.

Allowing a couple of monopolistic corporations who are already sitting on huge mountains of cash to destroy our economy just to get more is not in America's best interest. Their argument that they need more cash to upgrade their service when they already are making obscene profits doesn't make any sense.

They have forced almost half the states to write laws restricting competition and yet have done absolutely nothing to bring internet connections to those areas that they refuse to serve because there aren't enough people to make it worth their while.

These people need to either get their act together or get out of the way, not obstruct other people for their own personal aggrandizement.

Please make the right choice today to safeguard free speech and equal access online. Allowing private, profit-driven interests to determine access would cripple innovation for years to come. This would be a dire mistake, and is one we cannot afford to make.

Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers under title 2

Gentlemen,

It is with some trepidation that I read the intent of this committee to reclassify some traffic as "priority" traffic to ensure negotiated speeds even during peak traffic times.

To characterize this as a non-discrimintory policy based on ability to pay would be folly. It is an attempt, as well as I can see, to have the internet providers being able to live up to their promised speeds to high dollar accounts without having to upgrade equipment. This can later be used to squeeze more money out of less affluent consumers or accept near dial-up speeds. The obvious answer would be for these providers to not promise speeds that their networks cannot handle at peak times.

Even my internet connection contract lists a maximum speed and clearly states that it may be lower at peak traffic times.

This will have an effect of the haves vs have-nots on it's face. Whereby the traffic of the haves can travel at the highest speed the equipment can handle (as we should know, communication always moves at the speed of the slowest link) and the probability exists that other traffic for the have-nots (such as e-mail) could be throttled back to where their messages could be slower than US surface mail.

The only fair treatment for the internet is to treat all packets similarly. To do otherwise opens the process up the the "seperate but equal" quality that was evident during the civil rights movement.

Subject: "Net Neutrality"
To whom it may concern,

As a recent college graduate with a degree in Information Technology I'm disappointed to hear of the changes that could potentially occur to the internet. First let me give the definition of what Net Neutrality REALLY IS: It is the principle that Internet service providers and governments should treat all data on the Internet equally, not discriminating or charging differentially by user, content, site, platform, application, type of attached equipment, and modes of communication. What the "Net Neutrality" Proposal that many citizens are concerned about does the opposite of this. it gives Large Internet Service Providers and Large Corporations a distinct advantage and could put many citizens at a disadvantage as well. If you truly want Net Neutrality to be the new reality then you need to classify internet providers as utilities.

Thanks,

Ian Carey

The Internet allows for individuals to stay connected to the rest of the world. This allows individuals to learn from other cultures and people around the globe. Limiting the internet would put people in a box and stunt the growth of the up coming generation. If you truly care about your future you would not limit the next generation's growth. Limiting the growth of our future for money is incredibly idiotic and selfish and will cause a lot of back lash. The internet also allows for an outlet of creativity in which people can get discovered for certain talents and flourish, thus increasing their income and therefore increasing the money going into the economy. It also helps small businesses connect to a wide range of people to flourish as well, adding more money to the economy. To try and monopolize the internet so that only a few can benefit from it is that like a new form of slavery in which most of the population would be limited in their growth. Its just a bad idea.

As an American we don't have many choices in how we access the Internet - so we turn to you to ensure that the choices we do have aren't bogged down by corporate greed. Internet neutrality is important! Currently the US has some of the most expensive and slowest internet service in much of the world, especially western countries. We are also cursed with too many monopolies with more pending. The internet deserves to be treated as a necessary public utility. One of the most offensive part of proposed changes is the possibility of restricting content unrelated to band with used. ISP want to much power. Should everything be allowed to be bought by those with most money? ISPs do not create content and their revenue should not pretend that they do.

The internet should be kept free and open so that every website, user, and interest can be served in equal fashion. Corporatizing the digital world runs counter to the purpose the internet. Do **not** allow communications companies, like Comcast, to determine which sites are "good" and receive "fast" service, and which site are "bad" and receive "slow" service. Net Neutrality protects democracy, grass roots citizenship movements, and the free exchange of ideas. Corporations have no right to control the information of the world. They did not create it so they shouldn't be able to own it.

Thanks.

I find it reprehensible that many people in the FCC deciding these things were recently employed by many of the companies that would profit from this proposal.

Keep the Internet free and open.

Don't let our government officials be bought and paid for by the very people they are supposed to be regulating.

We need net neutrality. The corporate giants already have control of so many things, the internet is a place to balance this. If telecom companies decide who gets the bulk of access, it is the same as censorship.

To Chairman Tom Wheeler and the FCC Commissioners——

To the FCC——

Please build any net neutrality argument upon solid legal standing. Specifically, this means reclassifying broadband under Title II of the Telecommunications Act of 1934.

706 authority from the Telecommunications Act has been repeatedly struck down in court after legal challenges by telecom companies. Take the appropriate steps to prevent this from happening again.

Sincerely,

Mari Dowling

Please do not support the proposal to let various companies including Comcast and AT&T decide who can benefit from fast Internet speed. It would greatly crippled the freedom of information we currently enjoy and which is essential to a functioning democracy. Thank you.

I believe passing this proposal, lobbied by the big telecom companies, will stifle start-up companies, small businesses and non-profits who would not be able to afford paying for access to "internet highways". This could lead to bad economic outcomes for the United States as these companies move to other countries with more open markets. I also believe it can be used to effectively silence dissidents and as such is a danger to free speech. Please vote against this proposal today and save the internet! The people will not accept this!

You must realise you are on a slippery slope. I am not a US citizen but I strongly disagree with this. Being from the UK, I am protected by a law passed by the European parliament but this strongly angers me. I feel that if an ISP upgrades a part of a network, everyone should be allowed to benefit. ISP's, may also throttle consumers to try to get them to pay more.

ISP's are only the content providers never the content creators but this makes me think you want them to allow them to do this. I urge you to stop trying to pass this law as this could destroy the internet and if it was to continue, meaning people may move to MeshNets like the DarkNetProject to do share information.

You are treading a fine line. I hope you make the right decision.

I was deeply disappointed to hear that the Federal Communications Commission is planning on implementing rule changes that would allow Internet service providers to pay for special, faster lanes to deliver their content. In an environment where large corporations can pay for faster service, start-ups and every day Internet users won't be able to compete and we will lose the open, free-flowing exchange of information that has made the Internet so dynamic and integral to our lives.

The FCC can ensure it has the tools to act by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service. I urge you to reject the new rules and to take this vital and common sense step toward protecting net neutrality.

The Internet was designed and intended to function as a free, public information utility. That intent is worthy of protection from corporate greed, intervention and control.

Keep the Internet neutral. Declare the Internet a public utility and protect and preserve Net Neutrality forever.

Subject: Public comment on proposed internet regulations
Dear Commissioners,

Now that the floor is open for public comment about the new FCC rules regarding net neutrality, I would like to share my opinion:

I strongly feel that the new FCC rules need to ban paid bandwidth prioritization, also known as the 'internet fast lane.'

While Commissioner Wheeler has countered that any paid prioritization would be subject to FCC review under the current proposed rules, I detest the idea that a company with a large amount of funds could pay ISPs for preferential treatment. I detest even more that the FCC might review and approve one or more fast lane agreements.

Paid bandwidth prioritization is not in the public's best interests because it stifles entrepreneurs that attempt to compete with companies that have bandwidth priority. Similarly, it would create disproportionate advantages for some companies as compared to their competition. For example, if Web Host A has bandwidth prioritization and Web Host B does not, everyone will try to host their site with Web Host A, and Web Host B will lose out on business.

Simply put, the FCC can do better than the current proposed rules. Put a ban on paid bandwidth prioritization. It's in best interests of both the public and a market that rewards experimentation and competition.

Thank you for your time.

Tom,

The FCC's claim to fame is that they are there to regulate, regulate whom? In our eyes, the people you are to regulate the Corporations that want total control. Well in all reality it is all of them. Right now we are sliding to one extreme, and you are not taking the wheel and turning back to the middle. It is time for you decide whether you will be remembered in infamy or as a rogue who stood up to the corporations that try to control you with that money you so desperately crave.

Right now, as it stands, if I were to re-open my business I would not have an adverse hurdle to overcome when creating a new website. If my organization were the best I would not have to worry about paying someone more (than what is reasonable) so people could actually access my wares. Instead what you have allowed is that I have a new hurdle to overcome later. Great, you don't care your corporate sponsors (let's just shorten the description down to sponsors) are giving you ata-boys and patting you on the back.

It is time for you to stand up for the majority of people and what they want, to not be messed with. That is what ISPs are doing, and you are helping them right along. I understand prices go up, but inflation is not our problem, and that is what makes the higher and higher prices ISPs say they have to call for, because poor them.

This whole, "Not us, it has to be on them" attitude is sickening. Why is it sickening? Because we have the corporations taking utter control of their entire markets and there is literally no free trade if it is just one company (a monopoly, or in this case a burgeoning oligarchy, just you wait) to rule them all.

Do the right thing, move this whole thing back to the middle, you know what you would have to do, are you scared of going against your sponsors? Well, that false sense of security you feel while your sponsors are reassuring you that this is for the best of everyone, is truly a ruse and you know it.

A seriously concerned individual,

Max Millner

To whom it may concern I am writing on behalf of the recent decision to push forward allowing internet providers to charge extra for the implementation of "fast lanes". I ask you to please reconsider going forward with this ruling in an effort to preserve what could be considered the greatest invention of our civilization. The internet allows us to communicate with our fellow humans as well as provide a platform for education and collaboration. The internet has become a necessary part of life just as electricity. To penalize people for wishing to use the internet is punishing people for wanting to learn and wanting to live. America is already falling behind other countries when it comes to the quality of our network infrastructure. What we need now is more competition between providers which will influence these companies to offer better, faster and more reliable connections. Please realize that giving corporations more power over us is not the answer. I look forward to the day when the internet is protected and preserved.

"From multinational bank to independent blogger, anyone with a website gets it delivered at the same speed. But now, the FCC - responsible for regulating communications - will vote on whether to sell off high speed Internet service to the highest bidder by allowing companies with deep pockets to pay to have great service and slowing down everyone else. It's a proposition that would destroy the Internet's democratic roots". This is unfair and un-just. The FCC head is holding a meeting about whether to move forward or kill the proposal. The proposal must be emphatically denied so the internet can continue to stay free and open.

Please keep the internet neutral. Websites should procede at the same rate regardless of whose websites they are. We already have tiered pricing for internet services. I pay one price for 15 megabites per seconds and would pay less if 3 megagites if that would have suited my needs. If the internet needs to be reclassified to a public utility then do so. If the neutrality is not kept I think a lot of voices would not be heard. That would not be good for our democracy.

The internet doesn't just belong to the wealthy and corporations. It is a resource for all and should not be tilted one way or another to favor the "haves".

To the FCC,

I am writing to ask that you re-think and re-write your “Internet Fast Lane” bill. I, like many of my peers, believe that unless you specifically ban the creation of internet “Fast Lanes”, the public internet as we know it will change quite drastically for the worse.

What the FCC is proposing by not specifically banning these “fast lanes” will severely handicap America’s tech industry by putting small companies and startups at an immediate disadvantage. These new rules, if allowed to go into effect, will act as a roadblock to companies that cannot afford to pay whatever toll internet service providers deem fit.

By holding the positions you do, it is your responsibility to make decisions based on the good of the people of this country. When you make decisions that affect the entire country based not on the common good but on personal gain, you betray the people who put their trust in you, and you betray your country as a whole.

I hope that you will not allow net neutrality to be destroyed. I hope that you will not put up another road block in the way of our recovering economy. I hope you will encourage the free expression of ideas and foster those who would innovate and change the world for the better.

Please explicitly ban the creation of so called “internet fast lanes”.

Sincerely,

Matt Farineau
Web Developer

It is not a telecom company's decision to piece meal the internet contents. Consumer pays to internet services providers for their choice of bandwidth capacity with upload/download speed capability. So it should be the consumer's decision how they want to utilize the amount of network bandwidth what they are paying for, if internet speed for download/upload capabilities is not acceptable to consumers then they can decide whether to limit their usage for the internet contents that requires high bandwidth or upgrade their line with higher bandwidth / speed capability. One analogy comes to mind e.g. Consumers pay for the public water per their usage. Water company does not care (should not care) how consumers are using it whether for dishwasher or cloth washer or for any other purposes. So this is not an Internet service provider's decision. It is consumer's decision!!!

Please do not take away another of our freedoms. The internet should be for everyone and not charged. It's one of the only things some people can afford. They have to pay for the access then to pay on top of that would be wrong. And for any group of rich corporate people to lay claim to it is just wrong.

Internet neutrality is a core principal -- and the correct public policy. Any policy that allows "fast" lanes and "slow" lanes is wrong-headed and discriminatory.

Please do your best to ensure Internet neutrality.

I'm in overwhelming support of the FCC moving to reclassify in broadband as a utility.

It is a necessity of 21st century life, not a choice or luxury.

Thank you

I think it is ridiculous to give big corporations so much control over what we see on the Internet. This proposal is very bad for regular people.

Mr. Wheeler,

Thank you for making the corporations you lobbied for previously the priority, not the American people. (Sarcasm)

You are a smart man – I know this because I used to read your blog!

Broadband needs to be treated as a utility.

Restrictions on Muni broadband needs to be lifted at a federal level.

We need more competition, not less...
